Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Washington, Aug. 30.—Senator Cummins today in a senate speech denounced "so called compulsory arbitration" as an impossibility. There is no power, he said, in which federal or state governments can force men to work when they do not want to. This, he said, would be the case under any actual compulsory arbitration law. The fifth and thirteenth amendments to the constitution, he said, would prevent operation of such proposed laws. "I do not doubt, however," said Cummins, "that congress could create a tribunal, and confer upon it jurisdiction to seize upon a controversy between a co-operative body of railway workers, such for instance as the brotherhood of engineers and the railway
