BARNUM & BAILEY CIRCUS RESEMBLES OPERA TROUPE

In some respects a circus bears resemblance to an opera troupe. At least no operatic impresario takes better care of his stars than do the managers of the Barnum and Bailey circus which comes to Salem, Saturday, September 9, for two performances and a street parade.
The family of giraffes, including a baby born last January, together with Chimnie Padden, an interesting baboon and Prince the Bear Brummell of lions, will be found in charge of a valet whose sole interest lies in the welfare of his wards. Andrew Zingara, valet, practically lives with the strange animals who are as exacting in their demands as the most temperamental prima donna. It is Andrew that sees to it that Chimnie's tobacco is properly kept, and that the cats are poured down the baby giraffe's long neck length-wise and not cross-wise. Zingara is proud of his task and will allow no one else to handle his charges. No English valet could be more careful about the temperature of his master's bath than is Zingara regarding the diet of his pets. The Barnum and Bailey circus folks are proud of their zoo and confidently claim that it is the largest animal exhibit ever taken upon tour. Babe, the huge hippopotamus, who normally wears a bland smile, represents an investment of $7,000 and is one of the aristocrats of the zoo. The circus admits, though, that it hasn't got a gorilla. A gorilla is practically priceless, because he can't be induced to live outside of Africa, even when you catch him, which is mighty seldom. Teddy didn't even see one. The gorilla's standard occupation is, or was, chasing Dr. Livingstone and attacking Paul du Chailu with a club. But the circus has got about everything else of note in the animal kingdom. In the performances this year the circus has specialized in trained animal acts and these include an elephant brass band—fox terriers and baboons who do riding stunts—somersaulting parrots and performing cockatoos, ravens and magpies—bears who walk on stilts, regular Hans Brinker—a horse ballerina in which thoroughbred horses dance in time and precision with pretty girls—the Artist Model horses, dogs and ponies—trained rats, cats and pigeons who frolic together under the spotlight without any fracture of naturalty, and many other numbers in which animals vie with their human colleagues of the circus. The circus is given under an 8 pole top—the largest spread of canvas ever erected—and the parade and performances are promised to represent the latest, best and most costly ideas in the circus field of entertainment.

Eugene and Salem Boys Back From Alaska
(Eugene Daily Guard.)
After two months spent on the Alaskan coast at Ketchikan and Petersburg, Paul Spangler, son of Rev. A. M. Spangler, returned yesterday to Eugene, with the story of how eight university students and two Eugene high school boys devoted the greater part of the summer to helping the Alaska salmon packers handle the 1916 catch.

Spangler left Seattle June 26, after having attended the Seabeck Y. M. C. A. conference, and proceeded directly to the Admiral Farragut to Ketchikan, where there were seven other University of Oregon men employed or hoping to be employed at the Ketchikan cannery. Kenneth Moores, of Salem, Laird Larwood and Berrin Dunn, of Eugene high school, Sam Bullock and Turner Neil, of Portland, Bryan Turner, of Salem, Charles McDonald, of Portland, Carrol Waldin, and Paul Spangler, of Eugene, 19 students from Pacific university, and 11 from the University of Washington were at Ketchikan during the first 10 days of the season, but the collection of students was broken up at the end of that time because of the poor catch that was being taken there. Kenneth Moores, Laird Larwood, Estley Farley and Paul Spangler then went farther north to Petersburg, where the fish were running better, and remained there for three weeks, when Spangler started for the home last Friday.

was forced to travel in the steerage because of the great amount of traffic that is being carried by the boats running in Alaskan waters. He is the first of the Oregon men to return.
The boat was almost a week behind schedule on account of the unusually large freight cargo that was picked up at the ports of call, and because of delays necessitated by fogs, which occasionally force steamers to tie up until the atmosphere becomes clear enough to allow landmarks to be discerned.
Spangler states that the discomforts of the steerage were offset by the experience of associating with the "roughs" many of whom were coming out from the mines for the first time in years, with their "pokes" of gold. Gambling games were the principal forms of amusement with these gold hunters, says Spangler, and such has a story that would be material for a novel. Rex Beach and Jack London would have nothing on these miners.

According to the census of 1910, there were living in Greater New York 1,927,713 persons who were born in foreign countries, of which number 1,104,029 lived in the borough of Manhattan, Brooklyn coming next with 571,000.
