BARLOW AERIAL BOMB HITS GROUND, REBOUNDS AND EXPLODES IN THE AIR

LESTER BARLOW and NEW AERIAL BOMB

Lester Barlow, the man shown in the accompanying photograph with his new aerial bomb, has been showing his invention to the United States army officers.

The bomb is dropped from an aeroplane, hits the ground, rebounds and explodes in the air and is the only bomb known that sets in this manner.

Mr. Barlow was chief engineer under Villa when that military leader was still in Carranza's army.

Stock Market Prices Rise to Higher Abnormal Levels

New York, Oct. 14.—Another week of buoyancy has been experienced on the stock market and prices have risen to still higher abnormal levels. Stock exchange transactions, which are averaging a million shares per day, do not begin to record the total activities of this market—the outside dealings having shown enormous expansion, not to speak of the extraordinary investments in foreign government bonds and securities. The annual report of the New York Clearing House showed gross clearings for the year ending September 30 of 147 billions, an increase of 57 billions over last year. Conditions favor continued activity in the security markets. Industrial concerns are now earning such big profits as to often make current quotations for many of them appear still comparatively low. This is especially true of the steel companies' stocks, which show profits ranging from 20 per cent to 60 per cent. Many other industries are also reporting very large gains in business, much of which is due to the prevailing high prices for all commodities. The steel companies are overwhelmed with orders, some extending far into 1918. Railroads are placing liberal contracts for cars, locomotives and rails at high prices without hesitation. Our exports of steel in August again touched a high record.

Highly excited by such conditions, this being proved by daily observation and the appearance of many new operators from all parts of the country. Higher Prices Expected. Here and there may be symptoms of overbuying and flotations of a questionable character; all of which means that, in view of present high prices, purchases whether for investment or speculation, should be made with increasing discrimination, favoring the better grade securities which have not yet had their full rise. It is quite evident, however, that the present movement of abnormal activity has not yet run its course. All indications point to unexampled industrial and commercial activity for some months to come. Of course much depends upon the war, the early discontinuance of which would force a temporary setback and readjustment at this center. Fortunately, present prosperity of the United States is based upon strong foundations, and is not entirely dependent upon continuance of the deplorable destruction in Europe. At present there are no signs of an early cessation of the war, and the best opinion is that it will continue at least until next spring if not longer. "Tariff War" Talk is Silly. The two most striking incidents of the war this week were Lloyd George's diplomatic but very candid notice to neutrals, "Hands off!" and Lord Bryce's sane and high-minded advice against "A war of trade to follow a war of arms." It will be well not to take too seriously the talk of a tariff war following the war. That there will be strenuous international competition when the struggle is over goes without saying; that Germany will endeavor to regain lost markets is to be expected, but that she will flood the world with cheap goods is silly apprehension, and that the commercial nations of the world can expand their commerce by raising prohibitive tariff walls is too absurd to receive serious consideration. While the bitterness of war is so intense, retaliation talk is natural; but commerce and self-interest are great peace-makers, and neither can permanently prosper in any direction where enmity rules. If retaliatory tariffs are initiated after the war, they will only do harm and their life will be precarious. Great Britain cannot prosper under a tariff on raw materials or foodstuffs. She has imposed an tariff on manufactured articles, which is doubtful if it will be more for purposes of revenue than for protection as a policy. British leadership in foreign trade after the war will probably make great strides; while the United States will certainly take the second place and in some instances will undoubtedly be a leader. It will also be necessary that Russia be taken into more serious consideration than heretofore. She possesses vast resources in timber, minerals and grain, which have hitherto lacked development because of inadequate outlets, transportation and a lack of capital. All of these shortcomings are being rectified even now.

Russia Will Prosper. The opening of the Dardanelles, the settlement of Balkan difficulties, improved rail connections with the North Sea and on the Pacific Coast all mean new prosperity to Russia, as well as new and cheaper supplies of raw materials for all the manufacturing countries of the world. New trade routes will be opened, in fact are being opened; and when peace comes we can anticipate a new set of commercial activities in all parts of the world, taking the place of those which we may lose when the war closes. In these new enterprises the United States, unhampered by huge war debts and exhaustion, will unquestionably invest a large share of the proceeds of current prosperity. In Western Europe, in South-eastern Europe, in Russia, in Mesopotamia, in South America and in Canada there will be large demands for capital, not merely for reconstructive work but particularly for new development. The shock of war will undoubtedly stir up new energies and new activities throughout the world, and no country will have so large an amount of available capital as the United States. The war-exhausted nations of Europe must struggle against a load which will handicap them for years to come.

On Friday the market was much unsettled by peace reports, which induced heavy realizations and sharp declines in a number of issues. Ambassador Gerard, however has not yet arrived, so the truthfulness of rumors that he brings peace proposals is yet to be determined. It is well to remember that peace will not be established overnight, and that negotiations to that end will be prolonged and tedious.

POLITICS

The campaign now is on this year, and there will be no delusion. And there will be some noise, I fear. And very much confusion. Great men, possessed of silver tongues, Armed with statistics dreary, Will exercise their aching lungs. Until the world grows weary.

There's no emergency right now. But we should speak, by gravity, A half a billion anyhow. To strengthen our weak navy. The army, too, must be made strong. Puiasant and potential, And coast defenses all along. Are equally essential.

Thus some will talk as smooth as grease, With seeming normal senses. While some will catch and feel the peace. And have their feet feel expenses. Brave men who bend 'neath heavy loads In these two groups I mention— To plead, myself, for better roads Is now my full intention.

Good roads are what we need today. Then if dread foes assail us, We make a speedy get-away. And they can't catch and trail us. If I sit back with loaded gun, Heaven pity my condition; On solid roads to cut and run Fulfills my fond ambition.

The people now at any rate Must listen to our pleading, We'll have it out in dread debate For weeks and weeks succeeding. The oratoric shell is burst, Throughout the changing season, Until about November first, When men get back their reason.

FAIRBANKS ON MEXICO.

Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks, in August 1913, at Indianapolis, said: "I have no doubt that the disturbance in Mexico during the last few years has been due to an effort on the part of ambitious, cunning men to force intervention and possible annexation. "Sensationalists are adding to the confusion of the situation and are making more difficult the solution of the problem. "If all our speculators in Mexico suffer pecuniary loss as the result of recurring revolutionists, that is a matter for future consideration, when stable government and peace are fully established in that country. "It is no warrant for shedding the blood of Americans. "To sacrifice the life of one soldier for all the dollars investors or speculators have ventured in Mexico would be the supreme criminal folly. "It is not an hour for either little politics or sensational journalism."

Nellie aged four, was gazing intently at the visitor's new bonnet. "Well, dear, what do you think of it?" asked the lady. "Oh, I think it's all right, Aunt Mary told mamma it was a fright, but it doesn't frighten me any."
