COURT HOUSE NEWS

As the young man notes all the big business houses, the question comes up, has he any chance? If the history of the next 35 years repeats to any extent the past 35 years, there will be very few men in business who now have their names in golden letters on the front plate glass. T. G. Albert, who arrived in the city 35 years ago today says that only one business firm is in the city under the name he found here the day of arrival and that is the Ladd & Bush Bank. The Meyers department store was J. M. Rosenberg & Co., located at Commercial and Court streets. John Wright was the pioneer grocer, doing business on Commercial street opposite the Ladd & Bush bank. The Levi clothing store occupied the site of the present U. S. National bank building while all the buildings on the block were of small frame structure. Squire Farrar's grocery was on the corner of Chemeketa and Commercial and all the business of the city was on Commercial street.

The awnings were mostly of wood with wood or canvas in front so that walking along North Commercial street on the sidewalk was something like travelling in a tunnel. Thomas Cross owned the meat market where Cross Market is now located and where the Meyers department store is now located was the opera house, with stores owned by Chinamen and second hand stores for the first floor.

Great preparations are being planned for the various classes; sewing, military, cooking and if desired correct English, French, German and Spanish. Now that the summer crops are harvested and hop picking over, there is a great demand for position and the employment department of the association is ready to answer all calls. "They'll quit drinking it when they're quit making it". Well, now, there's whiskey; let's watch it awhile.

CLAIM SUBMARINE AT WORK NEAR COAST

Captain of Ship Reports Picking Up Wireless Telling of U-Boat Attack

An Atlantic Port, Sept. 15.—A British freighter arrived here today with reports that she had picked up wireless messages asserting that a submarine had been attacking a merchant steamer less than a hundred miles off Nantucket.

Officers on board the freighter declared the message they intercepted merely said the sending vessel was being attacked by submarine shell fire.

The international code distress signal was flashed constantly. Not all of the call was decipherable. Another British freighter arriving today said warnings had been received by wireless that a submarine was in the western Atlantic waters.

Unconfirmed reports reaching another port indicated still another ship was attacked by a German submarine somewhere off the New England coast.

Many Such Reports

A steamer (name withheld) reported she intercepted a wireless message from a ship off the coast which said a German U-boat had been sighted. She was about to give her position when the call suddenly ceased. Repeated efforts to locate her brought no reply.

There have been numerous previous reports of visits of German submarines to this side of the Atlantic since the trip of the U-3 to Newport a year ago. All these reports, however, have turned out to be erroneous.

The British steamer which brought the report, anchored in this port at noon today. The captain immediately made ready to go ashore and report at the offices of the owners' agents. It was understood, however, that under instructions from the navy department in Washington he would be unable to tell his story until a complete, detailed report had been made to Secretary Daniels.

Seeking Information

Washington, Sept. 15.—The navy department, hearing of the reported submarine attack off Nantucket, talked with the commandant of the New York naval district and instructed him to board the British ship bringing the news and get full particulars of the British captain's story.

The only information the department had was that the skipper had told of intercepting the message when he arrived in port. The department planned also to get in touch with the Boston naval district.

Patrol ships searching the whole territory around Nantucket lightship could discover no trace of a submarine up to mid-afternoon, the navy department was informed.
