On Tuesday President Wilson will deliver his message, sounding the call for such action as he believes necessary to carry America to victory in the war for democracy. In presenting his message, the president will appear before a joint session for the first time since the decimessage.

Adjournment was taken in both houses today immediately after preliminaries were disposed of, to await the president's message. Galleries were crowded, however, and members brought word to both hous and senate of increasing determination to wage war to victory among the people "back form the house as the leave was granted.
