W. H. GALVANI TALKS ON RUSSIAN AFFAIRS

Native of That Country Lectures To Alliance of Labor and Democracy

"If you would turn half a dozen I. W. W.'s loose in Salem the noise they would make would upset the town. That's what happened in Russia when the present Bolshevik regime came into power."

Thus was characterized the present situation of affairs in Russia by W. H. Galvani, a native of that country, in an enlightening address at a meeting of the Alliance of Labor and Democracy last evening at Walker hall. Mr. Galvani stated that the Russian peasant was by nature a peace loving person and all they wanted was a small plot of ground of their own and then to be left alone as they made their living from the soil. They did not want the war and were forced into it originally only at the point of the bayonet.

Thus when the Bolsheviks, which Mr. Galvani characterized as I. W. W.'s and the worst element in the empire, wanted to get into power, they went among the peasants and the laboring classes and shouted for armistice and peace.

Mr. Galvani thinks it a great misfortune that the Bolsheviks came into power but he believes they are but a temporary misadventure and that soon the more conservative element will again be in the saddle. The March 1917, revolution was the greatest event in the history of Russia in the opinion of the speaker.

The throne for the past 200 years, said the speaker, had been a place for drink and intemperance, usurpation, execution, assassination, corruption, persecution, open murder, adultery, prisons. "In no country in the world," said the speaker, "has so much brutality been displayed by a government to its people, so many of them assassinated or thrown into dungeons to rot. There is not a single family of any standing in all the vast empire but one or two of its members have been sacrificed on the altar of Russia's freedom."

"At the beginning of the war Russia called thirteen millions of troops to arms. Since that time I believe that fully one half of them has been lost through the cowardly and brutal treachery of the imperial government which sold the life and soul of the empire to the Germans. And you have heard of the holy church of Russia? It is no better than the imperial government. The two have worked together for centuries in persecuting the 180,000,000 people of the realm. What can you expect in a country where this has been going on, where the best and noblest minds have been harassed and executed and made outcasts?"

For the position of King Bing several possibilities have been mentioned the strongest of whom are Hal Patton, W. M. Hamilton and Wm. Gahlsdorf. Mr. Gahlsdorf says "nothing doing" as far as he is concerned as "Little White is going to give his time to business the next year." But a King Bing will be elected all the same.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC DEPOT BEING MOVED

Relic of Pre-Historic Age Doomed to Pass Into Realms of Oblivion

"The old-time things are passing giving place unto the new." The poet who gave substance to the above sentiment must have had in mind an event taking place in Salem today. It is pathetic when youth is cut off at the verge of manhood, but when the old pass away full of years and after a long and useful life there is no cause for mourning, but rather a cheerful submission to the immutable laws of life to which a peaceful death is the happy solution. This is true not only of life, but of buildings; and Salem will view with becoming resignation the passing of the venerable building which for so many years has served as a depot for the Southern Pacific. Its days are numbered. It has traveled far, but it has reached the end of its journey, or will tomorrow. Since last Friday workmen have been digging under its ancient foundations and putting the skids under it. Tomorrow it will be on wheels and will have the right of way north along the track for a couple of hundred feet where it will be placed temporarily while it watches the new depot arise in its old place. A stranger waiting at the depot this morning asked one of the men digging around the foundations what he was doing. He received the rather startling information that "the Southern Pacific had just learned Ben Holladay had lost a quarter under the building in 1869 and he was sent to look for it." This was probably an invention of the workman. Some other person disposed to be facetious, has written on the corner of the building a brief obituary which reads:

"Just as I am without one plea."
