Stocks Are Stronger In Wall Street Today
 New York, Jan. 31.—The New York Evening Sun financial review today said:
 Today's stock market was consistently strong and trading was brisk in comparison with the recent sessions. Transactions exceeded a half million shares in the first three hours and in some cases ranged from one to more than five points.
 The list held back for a brief space in mid-afternoon, but resumed the upward swing, following publication of the president's letter to the Farmers' Conference at Urbana, Ill. This was interpreted in some quarters as an expression of opinion that the war would end in 1918, which, whether right or wrong, gave stimulus to the general peace obsession.
 Still pushed through 97, General Motors crossed 138 and General Electric 136; Canadian Pacific made a gain of six points and Heading more than two.

Additional Credit For Great Britain
 Washington, Jan. 31.—An additional credit of $65,000,000 to Great Britain for January and of $210,000,000 for February was announced by the treasury today. This brings the British total to date for 1918 to $460,000,000 and the grand war total to all the allies to $4,235,000,000.

Kaiser Appeals for Help
 Amsterdam, Jan. 31.—"We need the help of all who love our severely tested people, especially our political leaders," declared the German kaiser in a telegram to the king of Bavaria, reported here today.

Prospect For Snow Pleases Power Company
 At least one man in town was feeling cheerful this morning as a result of the cold snap that struck the valley last evening. That was W. M. Hamilton, division manager of the P. R. L. & P. company. Mr. Hamilton assigned as the reason for his cheerfulness the prospect the colder weather brought for snow. There is no snow on the mountains anywhere at the present time, which means that the streams of the valley will be very short of water next summer unless snow falls in the mountains between now and spring. With low water in the streams on which are located the company's generating plants it means that much of the power and current supplied by the company through the summer will have to be generated by steam. It costs considerably more to generate electric current by steam than by hydraulic power, and Mr. Hamilton says the present power and light rates to consumers are now based on the cost of hydraulic generation rather than steam. Consequently, Mr. Hamilton states, all the electrical men of the northwest are hoping it will turn cold and snow.

Events in Central Empire Important Washington States
 Officials Are Led to Believe That Great Popular Uprising Is In Progress
 Washington, Jan. 31.—The most important events in the history of the war are believed impending today in the central empire.
 Withholding official comment on reports of great strikes in Germany and Austria, uprisings against the government in Austria-Hungary, revolt of the Czechs and socialists in the Austrian army and destruction of vast amounts of war supplies in both countries, the state department is utilizing every source to learn the truth behind the Teuton curtain of censorship.
 That so much news of unrest in Germany is being allowed to creep over the borders is regarded at once with satisfaction and suspicion by officials here. In the past such news has been carefully guarded. Little is now reaching the outside world from Austria, where the greatest upheaval is believed going on. This censorship, it is stated on high authority, clearly confirms the government's information that events of tremendous import are transpiring in the dual monarchy.
 Meantime, this government is keeping the people of Austria-Hungary informed of events transpiring in the rest of the world. The United States is blasting the German censorship with airplanes and other means of communication with the Austro-Hungarians. The unrest in Germany is being communicated to the workmen of Austria and so far as possible the Germans in west front trenches are being kept informed of conditions in Austria.
 Officials here see in the German and Austrian difficulties not only unrest at economic conditions, but a sincere movement for greater representation in economic conditions, but a sincere movement for democratization. President Wilson has sought since we entered the war.

An Economical, Delightful, Light Place to Trade

1918 BRINGS GREATER VALUES IN WIRTHMOR $1.00 WAISTS

In a year when wise spending will be in order--there's more reason than ever before for always buying Blouses here--for our close co-operation with the makers makes possible truly superior values in Blouses at every price.

The new styles of Wirthmor Waists on sale tomorrow, still priced at just $1. Another year rolls around, and we can again announce no advance in the price of Wirthmor Waists. And inasmuch as the high standard of quality has been maintained the values are relatively greater than ever before. So that it is still possible for economically-disposed women to obtain new, correctly styled--well-made--perfect-fitting Waists for just $1.00. Only possible here--and only because of the great economies of the Wirthmor Plan.

Americans Take Over Sector of Line

Washington, Jan. 31.—American forces in France have taken over permanently a sector of the fighting front and will hereafter fight alongside the allied soldiers, it was learned officially today.
 Heretofore the Americans have been in the trenches only temporarily for training purposes. The "veterans" have now reached the stage where they are counted on to hold a trench sector.

Collinge Says Tobacco Is Needed In Battle

The cigarette is one of the essentials of the battle front in modern warfare, declares Private W. E. Collinge, one of the 50 survivors of the famous "Fighting Seventh" battalion, Canadian infantry, who is now official lecturer as one of those accompanying the official Canadian war pictures being shown at the Liberty theater. Private Collinge, now wearing the uniform of the 50th Gordon Highlanders, the organization which won the significant cognomen of the "Ladies from Hell," from the Germans at the battle of Ypres, and with an amputated arm as witness to an act of bravery on the battlefield, brings some interesting first hand knowledge of what fighting in front line trenches means.
 "The cigarette is an absolute necessity to the man in the trenches. No matter if the soldier has never smoked before, he will soon be smoking cigarettes or of course, perhaps, a pipe, after he goes to the front."
 "As soon as the shells begin coming over, the preparation for an attack by the enemy, you throw yourself down on the bottom of the trenches. If there is nothing but mud, you lie down in the mud. Then you begin smoking cigarettes. It gives you something to think about, some occupation while you are waiting, with the inferno of exploding shells all about you. You just devote yourself to smoking, until the order to action comes."
 "Then a fellow who is wounded, the first thing he wants, if he is able, is to get a cigarette. When I lost my hand by the bursting of a German bomb, I told them to please give me a cigarette until I could get thru the thing. In the hour that I was in getting back to the field hospital, I smoked 30 cigarettes."
 "Someone always has a cigarette to give you if you run out on the front. Someone always has a match. The men keep them dry in spite of the weather, under their helmets or in some pocket where water can't reach them."
 It was in a bombing attack of January 16, 1916 with the object of cleaning up a barricade the Germans had established across the Plug street road at Messines that Collinge lost his hand and had his forehead, eye and cheek badly cut by pieces of the German bomb. There were 16 bombers in the party assigned to clear out the barricade, which could not be reached by the British artillery without danger to their own men. While attacking a German bomb fell in their midst and would have meant the end of the party had it exploded there. Collinge seized the bomb, stood at full height and threw it back. It exploded just after it left his hand. But three of the party were wounded. The Germans were forced out of the barricade which was blown up by a mine. Not a man was killed in the Canadian party, although they had to encounter wire entanglements and artillery shelling in their attack.
 Private Collinge is an entertaining talker and all thru his lecture his audience realizes that he has seen some of the heavy fighting "over there."

Alien A. Kafoury Writes from Camp J. Johnston

The following letter from one of Salem's soldier boys is of interest: Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Jan. 10, 1918, Mrs. H. P. Stith:
 Well, Mrs. Stith, I am in the army now, and am very glad that I have taken this step. One more on the side of democracy.
 You have heard a good many stories about the boys losing their politeness and table manners. I am able to defend this argument with actual experience. Here is a summary of a speech given us by our company commander this morning on how to conduct ourselves at all times, and in all places.
 I choose to call this summary the soldier's ten commandments:
 1. Remember you have joined the army in time of war, and you must act as men, and will be treated as such.
 2. You shall not report any mistreatment to your fellow soldier, but rather to the company commander.
 3. You shall be granted a pass to go to the city if necessary, providing, when you ask for a pass your face is clean, hair combed, suit pressed, and be a gentleman when in the city.
 4. You shall always look neat, and clean, or you shall be punished.
 5. Act like a gentleman when at dinner table.
 6. You shall behave your self when attending a divine service.
 7. You shall treat every one like you want to be treated.
 8. You shall respect all officers in command.
 9. You shall come to attention and salute all commissioned officers.
 10. If you observe these rules you will be treated, like you wish to be treated, and be of benefit to yourself, as well as the company.
 From this you may see that army life as a rule helps to bring out everything that is good in a man. Although there are always some fellows who do contrary to the rules, but such a class of men are very few and could be found in almost any community, and if the army is misrepresented it is because of these few, who are a detriment to society anyhow. So if you hear any such news you know from what source it came.
 The quartermaster corps, which I have enlisted in, because of the line of work it is set apart to do, is considered to have the cream of the manhood of America, composed mostly of students, professionals, merchants, every occupation and profession in the industrial life is here represented in this branch of the service. This fact was proved when the "Y" secretary asked for volunteers to take charge of the meeting, and believe me there is a man for every duty required to conduct a meeting. Musicians, religious leaders, speakers, stage actors and I don't know what. The men do their duty when asked and do it cheerfully, carrying not for applause in the melting pot for the human race to come to a better realization of the life here represented in the industrial life. It was said of a soldier in this camp who gave half of his blankets to his fellow soldier, and he himself shivered with the cold in bed, this is the spirit of the men in this army.
 I say then, if it takes war to hasten the day when the brotherhood of men shall be manifested in every heart, let war come.
 Somehow I cannot assemble a group of words that shall be adequate enough to set forth my appreciation of the Y. M. C. A. in the work among the soldiers, but I can say that without the "Y" there shall be no victory over the selfishness of men, which was partly the cause of the war. The "Y" is establishing democracy in the hearts of men, without arms, while on the other hand shot and shell are to perform the same task.
 We are treated by the superior officers like we ought to be treated. The same performance of duty is invoked upon every man alike regardless of his standing in society while civilian.
 I expect to be called out of the receiving company to a regular company of store keepers in a short time. Now I am taking some infantry drill which is required of every man in the U. S. army.
 Well, Mrs. Stith, I have told you all
