BELIEF IN EARLY WAR END GROWS STRONGER DAILY SAYS CLEWS, FINANCIER

New York, Feb. 8.—Belief that the war will soon end grows stronger each day. This belief is not entirely intuitive and is largely based upon the break-away in Austria-Hungary and the growing dissensions in Germany, particularly the great protests by labor in Berlin, Hamburg and elsewhere, which may or may not be exaggerated for effect here.

The Allies, no matter how weary, are certainly in better condition to continue the war than Germany, which is slowly but inevitably drifting towards some sort of collapse. It is well to remember, however, that Germany is pre-eminently a military power and being such the only final argument that counts is a blow. Militarism can only triumph through force, and can only be defeated by the same means.

The extension of government control over industry moved forward very rapidly. Within a few days the oil industry has been placed under government control; buying for the government has been put in single hands; the coke industry has fallen under government regulation, and the shipping business has come under a dictatorship.

Other incursions of government into business are evident in storage, dairy products, coffee, etc. The result of all these changes is an inevitable element of uncertainty that materially restrains commitments. They must be regarded as necessary evils and cheerfully accepted as part of the sacrifices to be made in order to win the war.

McADOO'S PLAN WOULD FORESTALL ANY ISSUE OF PAPER CURRENCY

Otherwise Should War Continue Paper Money Will Not Be Backed by Gold

Washington, Feb. 8.—Warning that if the war lasted long enough the government might have to issue a form of money with no gold reserve back of it was given the senate finance committee today by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

McAdoo said, however, that the proposed $500,000,000 government finance corporation would forestall such a course. "The bill does not contemplate in any sense an issue of uncovered paper," declared McAdoo in response to a question by Senator Smoot. "We may have to come to that, but this possibility is most easily met by the system proposed in the bill."

McAdoo explained that the main purpose of the bill was to marshal the nation's credit for war purposes, to prevent unnecessary expansion in any direction not essential to war work and to prevent the banks extending credit on anything but sound securities. The provision of the bill which gives the secretary of the treasury the power to appoint the directors of the corporation, was criticized by Senator Penrose.

McAdoo answered by saying that the president already was overburdened and that he did not think further burdens should be placed upon him. "Well, the secretary of the treasury is also director general of the railroads," said Penrose. "Is he not overburdened?" The secretary appeared before the committee to explain the measure which was drawn by him.

The present practice of the government in advancing as much as 30 per cent of the war contracts to contractors at a low rate of interest, was drawing more heavily on the treasury, he said. The $500,000,000 government corporation, proposed in the bill, is designed to take care of this needed credit, he explained.

"Do you mean to say that present going concerns not engaged in war work shall be prevented from issuing refunding paper?" asked Senator Townsend. "No, not exactly that," said McAdoo. "We think that all such issues should be first submitted to the government for its approval, though."

McAdoo then explained that while many concerns will voluntarily seek government approval before issuing credit, it is necessary to require all of them to do so, if the situation is to be controlled. "This bill would act in a financial way as the draft law does," he said. "It would compel those who will not voluntarily come to the government for approval to do so along with those who willingly come."

He further explained that the proposed law would renege savings banks and mutual savings banks among which there was some uneasiness now. "The government corporation would be able to extend credit to this class of banks in the event of heavy withdrawals," he said. Commercial banks which are compelled to extend credit to war industries and take in return non-redemtable securities, would be protected through assistance which the corporation would be empowered to extend, he said. Withdrawals from savings banks for investment in government war bonds may create embarrassment among this class of banks, McAdoo said, and it was necessary to provide some means of protection in case of such a contingency. "This is altogether probable if future government paper is issued with higher interest than the bank rates," said McAdoo. "We must protect the savings of millions of American workmen—an interest which is vital to the whole financial structure," he added. "Insurance companies are also similarly protected," he said.

President Talks On War to Farmer Delegation

Washington, Feb. 9.—America is now facing "the final tackle" between the things she "has always been opposed to and the things she stands for," President Wilson told a delegation of farmers yesterday.

"It is the final contest," he said, "and to lose it would set the whole world back not one hundred—perhaps several—years in the development of human rights."

The farmer delegation sought exemption from the draft for farmers and organization of a board of nine farmers to represent the agricultural world in the government. "There has never been a time," the president answered "which tested the real quality of folks as this time is going to test it, because we are fighting for something bigger than any man's imagination can grasp."

"The thing cannot be exaggerated in its importance and I know that you men are ready, as I am, to spend every ounce of energy we have got in solving this thing. "If we cannot solve it in the best way, we will solve it in the next best way and if the next best way is not available, we will solve it in the next best way to that—but we will tackle it in some way and do it as well as we can."

"I know you are going to do your best in any circumstances and I count on you with utmost confidence in that." Turning directly to the resolutions asking exemption from the draft, which were presented by the delegation of one hundred, the president said: "I cannot, of course, off hand, answer so important a memorial as this, but I need not tell you that it will receive my most careful and respectful attention. Many of the questions that are raised here have been matters of very deep and constant concern for months past and I believe that many of them are approaching as successful solution as we can work out for them, but just what these steps are I cannot now detail to you."

Lungs Are Weakened By Hard Colds

At Walden tried to qualify as a bull fighter Saturday morning, but now thinks he would rather scrap the kaiser. A Jersey bull owned by Mr. Chute had knocked him down and would undoubtedly soon have gored and trampled him to death had not Walden took a hand in the scrap. The bull, like Bergis, was wild, and welcomed the new entrant with a rush, knocking him down and walking all over him. Walden managed to grasp a ring in the animal's nose and twisted it until the brute broke loose and ran.
