WILL DECIDE WAR ON OCEAN

The falling down of the Russians and the overrunning of their country by the Germans will have a tendency to prolong the war, and will undoubtedly do so, since it will serve to hearten the German people and brace them up to still further sacrifices in helping the kaiser retain for a short time longer his power. It will to a small extent relieve the food shortage among the Teuton allies, but not to so great an extent as most suppose, for the reason that the Russian peasants last year were so intent on enjoying their new found freedom that they forgot to plant their fields as usual, and in consequence there is a shortage of foodstuffs in Rumania and Russia that will place even the Russians on short rations. Of course the Germans will see to it that it is the Russian rather than the German who goes hungry, but even with this there will still be a shortage of food, for another year. The German can accomplish nothing in the way of winning the war by any thing he may do east of him. There is a limit to his advance in that direction, for lack of transportation if nothing else would draw the limit to which he dared go even had he the man power, which he hasn't. The wise old Von Tirpitz knew what he was talking about when he advocated submarine ruthlessness and so did Von Hindenburg when he said: "neutrals be damned; win the war." Each of them knew at the time this discussion was up that the war would be settled on the Atlantic and not in Europe. The situation is the same yet, and when peace comes it will be because the submarine war has failed or because it has won. When Germany is convinced that her submarines cannot possibly win—when the allies demonstrate they can build ships faster than the U-boats can destroy; when fleets of destroyers or new methods drive the submarines from their haunts Germany will be ready to talk peace and a peace that can be discussed instead of the camouflage she and her ally held out as the real thing, to the benighted Russians. When the commerce of the world is freed from the danger of the submarine, all hope for Germany will be gone. At the best she can have only a peoples on her eastern borders who are quiet and submissive only as they are awed by superior force, and who will turn against her at the first opportunity. Her man power is steadily weakening and with the ocean free to America to send men and supplies to Europe there can be but one end. It is claimed that with the increasing fleets of destroyers and improved methods of attacking U-boats that the menace is steadily decreasing and that the Germans are unable to increase their submarine fleet. At the same time the German boast of starving England in a few months has proven fallacious and instead of starving her it is shown by port statistics that England's commerce has increased slightly within the past year. It is a question of the United States being able to supply the allies and maintain her own armies in Europe; consequently the winning of the war depends now on the shipyards of America. It is not a question of men, of money or of munitions, but of ships, for that means supplies. For these reasons it is idle to speculate as to what the Germans may do on the eastern front, for whatever it is it will not affect the results other than perhaps to delay the end. There are no vital spots in the east at which the Germans may strike. They cannot even send troops to aid the hard pressed Turks in Mesopotamia. The end of the war will be reached through the barred zone along the French and English coast not on the eastern front.

President Wilson sent a message of friendship to the Russian soviet at Moscow yesterday. He told them America was Russia's friend and was ready at any time to help her regain her place among the nations. While it is not likely the soviet will do less than ratify the German made peace terms, it is quite probable the leaders of the Russians, the real leaders, will remember and in time profit by America's promise.

JUDGE WORSE THAN CRIMINALS

When twenty-six persons taken before Judge Rossman of the Portland municipal court recently admitted they were members of the I. W. W., and when it was shown by indisputable evidence that they were engaged in treasonable practices at the time of their arrest, it would seem to the average citizen that something in the way of punishment would have been administered. This assumption is not far fetched in view of the fact that the nation is in the midst of the greatest war in all history. Yet the judge before whom they were arraigned sized their offense up as a petty affair for he punished it with sentences of from 20 to 30 days in jail. An attack on our government, the practice of treason, the threatening of our free institutions and the endangering of our liberties is considered by this judge as almost as serious as juggling a bottle of whiskey past a police officer. It is high time such farcical proceedings be brought to an end. It is bad enough when the habitual criminal I. W. W. make light of our laws and brings ridicule upon them, but it is immeasurably worse when one of our judges joins with them when brought before him, in making the laws ridiculous. If 30 days was enough for them the same number of years would about fit the crime committed by the judge who sentenced them.

The Swiss press has taken the right stand in regard to the sinking of a ship load of wheat and flour sent from the United States to Switzerland and sunk by German submarines. There were 3,855 tons of wheat or its equivalent on the ship, and the press insists that instead of sending a protest to Germany that the supply furnished the colony of 230,000 Germans in Switzerland be cut 50 per cent until the saving equals the amount destroyed. In other words the idea is to make the Germans instead of the Switzers stand the less and do the belt tightening caused by it. Sweden and the other neutral nations should profit by the hunch and instead of doing the going hungry act because of German ruthlessness, pass that job up to the Germans.

Colonel Leader's description of the methods by which the Germans could invade and capture the Pacific coast is quite ingenious. The weakness of it is that the colonel overlooked what the people of the coast would be doing while those 40,000 Germans were helping themselves to the country. The colonel very properly suggested that there was not enough probability of this happening to cause coast dwellers any uneasiness.

Rome was not built in a day, but that is where Rome was not in the same class as the Portland liberty temple built to serve as head quarters for those in charge of the next liberty loan and others that may follow it. It was not only built in a day, but it was built without cost and donated by public spirited citizens. The material and labor were both contributed.

Almost daily we are told that the allies have the Germans badly outclassed as to airships, yet the same daily dispatches tell of German airships raiding London, Paris and other points and not meeting with any very strong resistance in the air. Some one must have their fingers or figures crossed.

The Oregon consumer is perfectly willing to split his breadstuffs fifty-fifty, but finds it rather hard to do for the reason that the substitutes are not in the market.

One of the best ways for the country to Hooverize might be to dispense with the services of Herbert Hoover.

Rippling Rhymes

WASTELESS MEALS

My table sees no wanton waste, I do as Hoover tells; I eat my eggs with eager haste, and then consume the shells. Three times a day I drop my harp, and hush its golden tones, and eat my share of kippered carp, and then I eat the bones. But casting levity aside, since it's in rotten taste, I take a patriotic pride in cutting out the waste. We used to have a garbage can—fornish the barn it stood—and there the hired girl often ran, to dump all kinds of food. Big chunks of steak we failed to eat, she'd throw therein, kersplash; but now we take such hunks of meat, and make uplifting hash. For things in bulk, in days of old, I used to blow my pay, and when they grew a crop of mold, we threw the lot away. But now I'm careful of the dime, I buy just what we'll eat, say two molasses at a time, one egg, one grain of wheat. I always save the coffee grounds, and boil them o'er and o'er; no wasted provender abounds, back of my kitchen door. The village dogs that once waxed fat on what I threw away, now through their skins show every slat, and they must live on hay. The grocer's bills have shorter grown, the butcher feels an ache, when he wraps up a cheap soupbone, where once I bought a steak. It is no faddist's path I tread, no scheme of fitful gusts; I gladly eat my plain brown bread—the children eat the crusts.

Our Daily Story

THE CALLER.

At 9 in the morning he called up to find out if she was up yet. At 9:30 he called up to see if she had arisen, and at 9:40 he called again to see if she was still in bed. At 9:50 he got her on the phone and wished her good-morning. When he went out to lunch he sent her a bouquet of wild dillies, her favorite flowers, and when he came back from lunch he called her up to ask her if they had arrived safely. On his way back to the office he sent her a five pound box of chocolate coated sweet potatoes, her favorite confection, and half an hour later he called her up to see if they'd got there yet and how she liked them. All in all, before evening, he had called her up eighteen times and sent her eleven packages.

The Woman Who Changed

By Jane Phelps

THE DAY OF THE PARTY

CHAPTER XXIV

The day of the party I woke early. I was as excited as if I were giving the birthday dinner instead of Evelyn. Mrs. Sexton was due at ten o'clock which rather disgusted me, but even she couldn't quite quench my high spirits.

"Have poise, my dear, Mrs. Howard. A woman without poise is never a popular woman," she told me that morning, and a lot I didn't even hear, altho I pretended to. I was sure she reported to George, and I was not anxious for a scolding.

After she left I flew upstairs and laid out everything I should wear. I should have to dress early as George would come home to see that I would not disgrace him by not being properly gowned. I suppose I should have felt flattered, but I didn't one bit. I knew he was going back to the club to dinner, and it seemed so silly for him to come way home just to criticize me.

After luncheon I went shopping and bought some fresh gloves and slippers. So that he could have no possible cause to tell me I was not fit.

Then I lay down for an hour before I bathed and dressed. I was all ready however when George came in about six o'clock. The dinner was at seven. George said it was outrageously early, but I thought it just the right hour. I got so hungry when I waited until eight o'clock for dinner, as we had to at Mrs. Loring's.

George Approves
"Yes, you'll do very well," he said as I ran down the stairs. "I think you look better in it than you did when you wore it before. Your hair is dressed more becomingly perhaps."

"No, just the same," I answered, and thought I could tell him if I would why I looked better. It was because I was happier. Then I had been frightened, awed because of the kind of people I was to meet. Now I knew they were all young happy things like myself, and then Merton Gray was to be there too.

"I'll wait and drive down with you," George said.

"Oh, that will be lovely!" I exclaimed. "It will almost seem as if you were going," and I smiled happily at him.

He bent down and kissed my lips. It was such little things he did when least expected that kept my love alive. Had he not occasionally shown some feeling I am sure it would have died out almost as soon as I was alone with him.

But I had learned not to be demonstrative when he gave me any sense of a caress, so now I just patted his arm contentedly and sat quietly reading until it was time to go.

George wrapped me in the same lovely blue cloak I had worn to Mrs. Loring's, and after we were in the car and I laid my hand on his knee he took it in his and held it all the way to Evelyn's.

"I am so sorry you aren't coming," I said as he helped me out, and I meant it. I was sorry then; later I knew he wouldn't have enjoyed the evening, and probably would have spoiled it for me. We were altogether too hilarious to please him, too natural.

The Guests Arrive
I was a little early. I had promised Evelyn I would be, but early as I was, Merton Gray was but a few minutes later.

son sisters, Jennie and June with their fiancés. They were twins and were soon to be married on the same day, to Frank Arden and Charlton Mott—Jennie to Frank and June to Charlton. I hoped they would invite me to the wedding. Then there was Merton Gray Evelyn and Kurtis, and myself.

Everyone was so gay over the introductions. They all expressed their sorrow at George's absence very prettily, but all of them were delighted that Merton Gray had taken his place. He knew most of them, and some made friends with the others. Oh, how glad it seemed to be in that laughing, chatting crowd, all talking at once just as we used to at home. I could shut my eyes and almost think I was back with the boys and girls.

Tomorrow—The dinner.

* HAIR OFTEN RUINED *
* BY WASHING WITH SOAP *
*****

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary multifold cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get multifold cocoanut oil at any pharmacy. It's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

HATES WHOLE BUSINESS

Los Angeles, Cal., Mar. 13.—"I hate Prussianism, militarism, bureaucratism more than an American native is capable of hating it," declared Carl Von Fronsing in jail as an enemy alien.

HER DAUGHTER WAS SAVED FROM OPERATION

Mrs. Wells of Petersburg Tells How.

Petersburg, Va.—"For two years my daughter suffered from a weakness and pains in her right side; at times she was so bad she could not do any work. For two years she was attended by the best physicians here, and both agreed that she would have to be operated on. I suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and at first she refused to take it, but finally consented. From the very beginning it helped her, and now she is entirely well, and telling everybody how much good it has done her."—Mrs. W. D. Wells, 226 North Adams Street, Petersburg, Va.

If every girl who suffers as Miss Wells did, or from irregularities, painful periods, backache, headaches, dragging down pains, inflammation or ulceration, would only give this famous root and herb remedy a trial they would soon find relief from such suffering.

For special advice women are asked to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of forty years' experience is at your service.
