THEN SHE QUIT

New York, April 29.—Yvette Guilbert, the French actress, started to strip for the third liberty loan today. The cap she wore brought $2,000 for bonds; her apron brought $500; her handkerchief $2,000; her brocade $1,000. Then she became enthusiastic and pulled off her skirt.

After three waves above her head it went to C. F. Moore of Salt Lake City for $1,000—then she quit.

The New York federal reserve district, still lagging in the drive for its quota of $900,000,000, reported total subscriptions of $500,000,000 today.

After singing two patriotic songs and giving the flag salute the school children were dismissed for the rest of the day. Silverton has raised more than her apportionment in liberty bonds.

REAL WEST ON THE SCREEN

Word and Color Artists Outdone in "The Honor System"

In his new photoplay, "The Honor System," William Fox is said to have accomplished purely as an incident the most valuable reproduction of western life that the camera has yet given. For the first time in the history of the screen it is certain that the future historian of this country will turn for verification from the wonderful word paintings of Bret Harte and O. Henry to the scenes depicted in this master drama.

In realism Frederic Remington has been outdone, for what we have been wont to consider Remington realism becomes in "The Honor System" truth itself. The dance hall, the lazy burro, the biting mustang, the bat-eared cayuse and a thousand other things characteristic of the brave upstanding west are all there, real, breathing, speaking.

Showing the last times tonight at the Liberty theater.

Bunny Meiring Climbing In France

Every Elk in Salem knows "Bunny" Meiring and every Elk in the city will be glad to learn that he is doing a little climbing in the service, having been raised to the rank of sergeant March 5. In a letter to Harry J. Wiedmer, secretary of the local lodge, dated April 14, he writes:

"I am still in San Antonio, Texas, and busy as hell. I am now playing in the regimental band and have to practice every evening and with my extra duties as sergeant, I am kept on the jump all the time. I was made sergeant March 5. Not bad for being in the service two months.

"Mort Pilkenton and "Buddy" Welch are sitting here smoking and send their regards to all the bunch. How about our cards? These poor nuts down here are asking about them."

As we understand it the situation in Ireland is this: "We'll fight peaceably but begora we'll never be made to."

BATTLE NEWS STIRS MEN TO GO TO FIGHT WITH BRITISH TOMMIES

Volunteers to fight instantly grew more numerous when newspaper headlines furnished evidence of the need for men. That death and mutilation on a stupendous scale were the fate of others merely spurred [illegible] to fight.

[illegible] of volunteers rose at [illegible] the British Canadian Recruiting Mission with the flood of the battle overseas. Many recruiting offices have been opened recently throughout the country and all of them men swarmed in rushing the press reports of stupendous [illegible].

"I want to go. That Kaiser crowd has got to git," one told Sergt. Nat McPherson, who is on recruiting duty at one depot. "I want to go."

The officers and men of the Mission read the headlines with tense lines in their faces. To them, who have endured the deafening crash of [illegible] stupendous roar of artillery, rifle fire and machine guns in such an offensive as the Germans have begun, the press dispatches brought vividly back some desperate days in the trenches. To those men who had come back, many wearing the military Cross or Military Medal and "wounded" stripes, remembrance of the need made them redouble efforts to send forward results.

WAR HAS FORCED NATIONS TO SOCIALISTIC FOOTING

New York, April 20, 191[illegible]

Early war news this week was not encouraging. The German hosts brought unprecedented pressure upon the British army on the western front forcing it to give considerable ground, in an effort to sever the line and drive the British back to the sea. Fortunately that British line held, and through badly bent has not been broken. Hope is now rising owing to arrival of French reinforcements; and the most critical point since the war began is now being faced. The destiny of the world is at stake, and any day decisive results may follow. At the same time we must not deceive ourselves by overconfidence. Let it be frankly admitted that Germany has been immensely favored by the break-up of Russia, and the consequent release of large bodies of German soldiers, which enabled Germany to draw freely upon Russian labor and food supplies. Should the enemy succeed in making important gains in the present drive it will mean nothing less than a serious prolongation of the war. But a final German victory is impossible; because the world and civilization cannot and will not submit to German ideals and domination. In any event it will probably fall upon us to give the finishing stroke without delay. It is precisely this that Germany intensely fears; hence this hectic drive, this supreme effort to win, before America gets in with all its might. Our efforts to send men and munitions must be backed up generously and promptly with funds. The liberty loan must be heavily oversubscribed as a patriotic debt to our country, to the men at the front, and even on the common basis of intelligent self interest. Of late subscriptions have not been coming in with sufficient promptness. It is difficult to explain this lethargy, which is probably only temporary. The remainder of the campaign must be pushed with growing intensity, for success in the war depends upon successful financing. It is either "bonds or bondage."

Protesting Socialism

The war is proving a mighty centralizing force in government and industry alike. The authority of government has already expanded to a degree scarcely realized, except by close observers or those actually affected. All of the belligerent countries on both sides of this struggle have in four short years plunged into a degree of socialism far beyond what the most daring idealist dreamed before the war. As an experiment in political and economic theories the movement is likely to prove highly instructive. The strong undercurrent of socialism in this country and in Europe has already aroused considerable opposition. The collapse of Russia was largely owing to the disintegrating influence of socialism. Its sinister influences in France were early discovered and largely eliminated. As a binder together of nations or a preventative of war, it entirely failed in 1914. In Great Britain there is already a reaction against the socialist drift, and both capital and labor are sighing for greater freedom in the management of their own affairs. Capital protests against restrictions upon enterprise, while labor has no relish for restraint upon its right to secure the most favorable wages and working conditions obtainable. Were it not for the exigecencies of war, there would be a strong reaction in Great Britain against excessive government control.

Must be Unscrambled

How far this would go, it is impossible to say, for some of the huge industrial omelets created since the war could not be unscrambled in any event. The same is true here also. Socialism is as strong as ever among the uneducated classes; but labor is suspicious of a system of vague and untried promises which destroy its freedom of choice, while capital shies at the shadowy theories of an impossible Utopia. War is furthermore creating a series of dictators, not only in military affairs but in all branches of industry. The allies now have a single military head. Our own government, the greatest republic in the world, has placed more power in the hands of one man than any nation in the world. We have our dictators, big and little, in food, fuel, railroads, manufacturers, commerce, etc.; and the last move, an excellent one by the way, is to place Mr. Schwab in supreme control of shipbuilding. All this is admirable as a war measure, and will bring the needed efficiency in the shortest time. When peace comes and the era of reconstruction begins, there is no doubt that many of the new methods will be retained and that not a few of the discarded ideas will never be restored.

"Combination" to Come

At Cincinnati this week the foreign trade council of the United States, an organization of leading manufacturers and exporters for the purposes of foreign trade, held its annual convention. There was much significance in this meeting; for the United States is destined to very shortly greatly expand its foreign commerce. Concentration, combination and co-operation are the order of the day in Great Britain and in Germany. They must likewise be the watchwords of the United States, although doubtless each country will apply these ideas in different ways and in varying degrees. In all three countries a period of reconstruction will immediately follow the war. In this country a mass of existing legislation will undoubtedly be swept aside. Many of our laws are even now a dead letter. The Sherman anti-trust law and the La Follette shipping bill are both in the scrap heap. So is much of our railroad legislation, which has been a nightmare for years. Of what consequence now is the once dreaded Interstate Commerce commission. Where is the tariff and what are we going to do with it? What about our foreign treaties and foreign policies after the war? What about the activities of our department of commerce and department of agriculture and the war board? How far will they be maintained or expanded? These and many other like problems must shortly be met; for we are already on the verge of the reconstruction period which means so much for the industrial future of the United States.

Business is Confident

A remarkably steady tone prevailed in the security markets, despite unfavorable news from the front. There was a decided resistance to bad news, and a readiness to discount good news. This could be partly explained by the fact that the market is well sold out, that the supply of floating stocks is exhausted, that new offerings have practically ceased, that speculation is at its lowest ebb, that the railroads are now doing better under government protection, and that the big war industrials are making liberal profits notwithstanding war taxes and increased costs of production. The reason for this confidence in financial circles is also partly founded upon the coming of General Foch with French reinforcements, and unquenchable faith in an allied victory; government bonds of all the allied nations having been slightly affected by recent military reverses. Certain it is that optimism is universal among the inner financial circles, who get no little inspiration from the magnificent courage of those at the front as well as from those who quietly suffer and endure at home.

Rural Week Awakens Deep Interest In All Schools In County

Judging from the general interest taken by practically all schools in the county in the program for Rural Week, County Superintendent W. M. Smith, says that the results are so encouraging that hereafter agricultural week will be one of the regular features in the country school work.

Of 75 schools visited in the county last week, without exception, the rural program was carried out. In many instances, the interest was such that the afternoon programs were well attended by parents and the evening exercises bringing out the greater part of those living in the district interested in school work.

The pupils of the rural schools were especially interested in practical work, Mr. Smith said, such as testing milk, seed testing, drawing plans for farms and farm homes. The girls in their work put special stress on the arrangements of kitchens and the decorations of the home.

"The teachers rose to the occasion in great shape," said Mr. Smith, "and it is to them we must give the credit for making the first rural week an unqualified success. Many teachers adapted the program to the immediate needs of their communities and this of course added to the real interest of the rural week program."
