ed to win a showy success that might be dished up in a manner to quiet, for the moment, the threatening murmurs of the people of the central empires. There is no doubt that the allied front along the Aisne has been weakly held, General Foch was perfectly sound in his judgment in weakening it. He has had to do this in order to insure the safety of the channel ports, which is the paramount consideration. The Germans choose the Aisne for their camouflage victory undoubtedly because it was the least strongly held part of the front within range of the Teutonic reserves in western France.

Grover Cleveland Alexander Will Be Married Soon

Omaha, Neb., May 28.—Grover Cleveland Alexander is going to be married soon, it became known here yesterday. The bride-to-be is Miss Almira Arrant, a former St. Paul, Neb., school mate and sweetheart of the former National league premier hurler. Miss Arrant, who now resides here, had made preparations to leave for camp Funston last night when a telephone message from Alexander asked her to wait until Friday night because it was impossible for him to get a furlough until Saturday. The wedding probably will be held Saturday. Mrs. Otto Mera, wife of an Omaha Western league club pitcher, will accompany Miss Arrant to Funston.

WHICH—THE KAISER OR THE ACTOR? (Scene from the Kaiser the Beast of Berlin)

The big Jewel production comes to this city among the first sent to the cities west of the Rocky Mountains, thanks to the promptness and enterprise of Manager Bligh in booking it to his Liberty theater almost as soon as possible after it reached the Portland exchange.

In this seven reel super-production, with Rupert Julian playing in the role of the Kaiser, audiences will see the private life and character of the autocrat, with all his mad vanities and ambitions and cruel selfishness laid mercilessly bare.

They will see in a terrific review, the massacre and sack of Louvain and they will see German ruthlessness at work in Belgium, even as it hopes some day to be at work in America.

They will see the decoration of the Kaiser placed on Captain von Niegler, commander of the U-boat that sunk the Lusitania, and will see how the captain went mad with remorse over the crime he was ordered to commit by Europe's "mad man with a withered soul."

They will see the Kaiser smashed in the jaw by the captain of his guard whom he insulted.

They will see him swagger in gorgeous uniforms, and hear his boasts and threats in the historic scene with Ambassador Gerard.

They will see him fall, and will see the prediction of the end of the war and the end of the Kaiser are historically accurate, and the words of the Kaiser in the play are correct quotations of his actual utterances.

ing one down and forcing down another.

American observers in French planes flew over the enemy lines, flashing signals to the American artillery and carrying back messages.

The American gunners neutralized the enemy artillery fire for about five hours. An hour before the attack started tremendous explosions were observed near Cantigny.

A great number of American soldiers rode into battle on the rear end of the tanks, for all the world like kids back home "hopping a ride."

Pershing's Report.

Washington, May 28.—Details of aerial fighting in the Lorraine sector were reported by General Pershing in a supplementary communique dated May 28.

"Yesterday morning three of our planes encountered four hostile planes flying at 3,000 meters in the region of Monteno. In the fighting which ensued Lieutenant Douglas Campbell successfully attacked two of the German machines. One of these lost both wings and fell. This was referred to in yesterday's communique. In the same encounter one of our aviators was wounded, but succeeded in making a normal landing within our lines.

"Yesterday morning in the sector recently taken over by our troops an American sergeant encountered a German patrol of four men who had entered one of our trenches during the night. In the fighting which ensued our sergeant, although receiving three wounds succeeded in driving out the hostile patrol, which left grenades and wire cutters behind.

"In Lorraine, on the evening of May 26, a hostile patrol attempted to penetrate our lines. It was driven off with loss to the enemy of five killed. One of these was brought into our lines. One of our men was wounded.

"This morning Lieutenant Eickenbacher and Lieutenant Campbell attacked a group of six enemy planes and brought one down out of control."

Counter Attacks Repulsed.

Paris, May 29.—American troops have broken two successive German attacks on the newly captured town of Cantigny. The French war office announced today.

"The French left was drawn back to the eastern border of Soissons, where the battle is going on furiously," the communique said. (This represents a maximum retirement of about nine miles on the extreme French left).

British, after an energetic defense of the Masnie (literally Wall) of St. Thierry (four miles northwest of Rheims) were drawn back slowly to the south and southeast of these heights. They are holding between the Vesle canal and the Aisne.

In the center the fighting continued fiercely on the south bank of the Vesle, where the French are valiantly defending the heights.

There is active cannonading on both sides of the Meuse and in the Lorraine sector.

A series of German raids failed north of Bezonvaux (northeast of Verdun, where Americans are in the line), and in the Badonvillers sector (which includes the American Lunville sector).

LUDENDORFF'S PLANS DEVELOP

By Henry Wood
(United Press staff correspondent)

With the French armies in the Field May 29.—Development of the German offensive up to the hour of cabling appears to indicate that Ludendorff intends to drive a wedge through the Franco-British lines midway between Soissons and Rheims.

The Germans apparently have engaged a minimum of twenty-five divisions, before which the French and British in the front lines are putting up a dogged resistance, in order to permit reserves to intervene and turn the tide.

The German attack has extended the offensive front from Rheims to the Flanders mountains, until now it constitutes a battle area 300 kilometers (186.3 miles) across.

There is every indication that the present attack is an integral part of the original German offensive plan. It is positively known that during the winter Ludendorff prepared two great attacks, one against Amiens and the other against Rheims. He concentrated the necessary reserves a hundred kilometers (62.1 miles) behind the lines at a central point from where they could be sent at a moment's notice to either point.

Ludendorff left the choice of which sector he would attack first until the last moment for the purpose of confusing the allies. The final choice fell on Amiens. This being checked, he still had the Rheims attack to fall back on. This is now being carried out in precisely the same manner as the drive against Amiens. The enemy troops are said to have been trained for either attack.

The reserves concentrated 100 kilometers north of Rheims were rushed to the front Sunday night in forced marches. Following a brief but unusually intense bombardment Monday morning, including gas, picked and specialized assaulting troops, including the Fourth and Fifth divisions of Prussians, which led the Amiens attack, leaped to the assault.

The British and French retired in perfect order without permitting a single break in their lines, and inflicting the heaviest losses on the enemy.

If the present attack is merely a feint, its principal objective is the tying up of the French reserves to prevent their intervention in the final great offensive to the northward.

The German press recently charged that the German high command made a mistake in not tying up the French reserves before the Amiens attack.

The Germans' efforts to conceal preparations for the Aisne attack were greater than ever before. German prisoners declare they were brought up under the impression that they were to relieve troops in the first line and were informed that the offensive was to be renewed there just a few hours before the attack actually began. Prisoners taken several days before the attack knew nothing about the preparations. On the contrary, the French feared an attack in this very region.
