LIMITS OF DRAFT

many more than it is now anticipated to call this year. Under the present program the balance of the calls this year will still leave about 2000 men in class one on January 1, 1919.

Extension of the draft next season and a probable registration of 21 year olds in December or January will insure a new class one reservoir from which to draw. In addition, it is believed some 300,000 men will be added to class one through the re-examination of questionnaires now under way.

Baker told the committee that this plan will be drawn by the department if it is decided that a change is essential and would be presented to congress either late in the present session or early next session.

Announcement of Baker's wishes is to be made to the senate when the discussion of the army bill is resumed today.

Baker expressed the view of President Wilson, it was learned, although he did not state that it was Wilson's idea. He did not express opposition to changing the age except as to the method. His desire, Baker told the committee, is that when this step is taken it shall not be done "piece meal," but shall take into consideration every contingency as well as the war department's ability to train, equip and transport the additional men.

General March, chief of staff, and General Crowder, provost marshal general, concurred, Baker said, in his view that more time should be taken to consider the problem from every angle.

Baker disclosed the fact that "enlarged military program" is being prepared by the war department, though he did not go into details.

"I presented to the committee statements that for the present there are enough men in class one sufficient for our prospective needs and when the enlarged program of the United States is ready for presentation to congress we will at the same time have complete data on which to base any recommendations for changes in the age limits of the draft," said Baker after a long session with the committee.

The army will number 3,440,000 by September and of these, 1,450,000 will be in France, Senator Hitchcock announced in discussing the proposal to defer action on the Fall amendment.

"We will have practically two million soldiers in this country when congress reassembles after a recess, said Hitchcock, "so there is no emergency calling for action right now."

General March and General Crowder followed Baker before the committee. Both agreed with him. The committee immediately voted to abide by Baker's wishes and ask the senate to defer action. Baker was told, however, that when he presents his "enlarged program" probably after the coming recess of congress, the committee will insist that the new draft legislation not change the age limits but provide very definite regulations as to who shall fight and shall not.

The committee is practically unanimous in support of amendments which will give General Crowder the fullest authority to carry his "work or fight" order to the limit. To this end the new draft bill will contain provisions for classifying drafted men as fighters or workers and for otherwise providing both an adequate army to crush the Germans and an adequate labor supply to back up the army.

Committee members said that the "enlarged program" spoken of has not yet taken any definite form.

It is being prepared for, however, by collection of all the information available as to how far this country can go next year in getting men into the field and supplying them with artillery and aircraft. Upon the data so collected it is expected that no recommendations will be made for largely increased appropriations when congress reconvenes after a recess, or if not then, when the short session begins in December.

Fall Adherents Protest

Senator Chamberlain's announcement of the committee's action shortly after the senate met, brought a storm of protest from supporters of the Fall amendment to raise the limit to 45 and lower it to 18.

Chamberlain told the senate that the shipping situation is the most important factor.

"There may be a change in the arrangements whereby we are using French and British snips," said Chamberlain.

"This change may come by the end of July. It may be that our own production of ships will take care of the matter. But the war department does not know what the ship situation will be. It wants to know definitely before undertaking to raise bigger armies."

Senator Fall declared the war department evidently "does not want any preparedness measures adopted," and scored the military affairs committee for accepting Baker's judgment.

Chamberlain replied that personally he disagreed with Baker, but that the committee had used its judgment.

"I'm trying to find out whether these officials are simply trying to defer action until after the election. If I thought the secretary of war or General March were small enough to be influenced by an election, I'd reprimand both of them," Chamberlain said.

Chamberlain Assents

Chamberlain, in expressing his disagreement with Baker, said he favors getting 2,500,000 men to France just as soon as we can get them there.

"Eventually," he said, "we shall have to enlarge these draft ages, but for the present I am disposed to follow my judgment of these distinguished officers, who say no delay will be caused by deferring action until September."

McCumber Indignant

Senator McCumber hotly demanded why the senate military affairs committee doesn't take the matter into its own hands.

Senator Sterling demanded what General Crowder had said to the committee. Chamberlain said he had concurred with his superiors, Baker and March.

"General Crowder pointed out to us that his job is to carry out orders, not to formulate policy," said Chamberlain. "But I know that General Crowder is strongly in favor of changing the age limits," said Sterling. "I learned of the proposal from him and got the very definite impression that he is for it. Now he knows more about it than either Baker or March. And I'm in favor of taking his views ahead of theirs."

Chamberlain responded that Crowder does in fact agree with him that the limits should at once be broadened so that every available man may be used.

"But limits are put on the number of men we can use by our ability to train, equip and transport them," said Chamberlain.

"And this matter will be submitted in a comprehensive form later," Johnson Defends Officials. Replying to charges by Lodge and

PARIS IN WAR ZONE BY RECENT ORDER

Appearance of Streets, However, Indicate Anything But War Conditions

By Fred S. Ferguson

(United Press Staff Correspondent) Paris, June 26.—The official order that Paris has been placed in the army zone means more to Americans than a mere passing notice. It means that America's "Washington of Europe" is in the war zone.

From the offices occupied by Americans throughout the city to the sky where American aviators are on guard day and night, the heart of France beats with the heart of America.

War is the only thought of Paris.

McCumber that Baker and the war department were interfering with congress. Senator Johnson, California stated that it was at his request that Baker, March and Crowder were asked to appear before the committee today.

but the broad, shaded boulevards, the shop windows displaying feminine finery; the beautiful women and the uniformed men thronging the streets speak everything but the war zone. The city has the appearance of a vast park with sunlight streaming down on the crowds, the sidewalk cafes and taxicabs and military automobiles hurrying about. Sitting on benches or strolling in the moonlight along the Champs Elysees are American boys—some fresh from the trenches, others newcomers with French girls on their arms. Their voices drift to the ear like the whispering of lovers in shaded lanes at home.

British, French, Belgian, Australian, Italian, Portuguese and Canadian officers and soldiers of all the democracies of the world mingle with Americans bent on the same mission—to save the city that is the symbol of all that is best in the world from the crushing power of barbarism typified by the boche.

Theatres and cafes are open and crowded as heretofore. On one side street just off a boulevard there is little "theatre deguerre." It is in a cellar and here performances can be continued regardless of air raids.

Pretty Girl Will Draw Draft Numbers Tomorrow

Washington, June 26.—A pretty girl will determine the order in which 21 year old men, recently registered, will be called to service by tomorrow's draft lottery here.

For it has been decided that "Major Billy" Wellborn a young aide at Provost Marshal General Crowder's office, shall draw the numbers from the great lottery bowl.

And here is how the young men may know their order of call:

All registration cards are numbered. Each number drawn will correspond to similar numbers on hundreds of cards held by recently registered men. The order in which the number is drawn determines the order in which those holding correspondingly numbered registration cards will be called. For instance, if your registration card is numbered "3" and that number is the tenth drawn from the bowl, your place in the line of call will be ten.

Professor Haackel, eminent German scientist, has made recent reference to "this mad, culture destroying war." "The aged savant should cheer up. It is not so bad as that. All that's going to be destroyed is kultur."
