ARE ALL OF US PROFITEERING?

While wages in all lines have advanced since the United States entered the war, they have not advanced equally. Some callings command almost any wage they choose to demand, and these naturally draw from all other pursuits. This is notably the case with shipbuilding in which the wages have lured thousands from other pursuits, thus forcing an increased pay in these. Perhaps the worst feature of the whole situation is the draft made on farm labor. The harvest fields, especially of the middle west are calling loudly for help, and the situation is really serious. Above shipbuilding, and all other industries the farms are pre-eminently important. Without foodstuffs, especially the cereals, there would be little use for ships, or anything else. There would be nothing for them to carry, and there would be no sending men to aid the allies. There would be indeed a surrendering of the world's freedom to Prussian autocracy. The question naturally arises are not the American people as a whole profiteering? Instead of pursuing our avocations as usual, all of us are demanding greater returns for whatever we have to sell. It may be merchandise, it may be foodstuffs, it may be labor, in fact it is all of these and then a great deal more. It is true that the price of living has so advanced that greater returns are necessary, yet if these greater returns were equally divided, it would make little difference whether returns were what they used to be or what they are now.

If everyone received double wages and paid double for everything he used the final accounting would show but little change in results. We are spending, with what we loan the allies, about $24,000,000,000 a year. Of this sum it is proposed by congress to raise about one-third by taxation of many kinds and hues. While the balance is borrowed from the people, it will eventually have to be paid by them. The higher wages and the greater cost of everything simply increases the sum we will have to pay, so that much of the increased pay for labor and materials will eventually have to be paid by labor and by the maker or grower of the materials. We are getting double price for everything and are doubling the amount we will finally have to pay. To the thrifty, the era of high prices offers a splendid opportunity to save, for the increased wages and prices permit this despite the higher cost of living for the reason that there is a larger margin left between earnings and expenditures. The thrifty and the saving will profit by higher prices, but the great body of Americans will not, simply because they do not save.

Oregon's quota for the next liberty loan has been placed at $47,000,000. This is $30,000,000 more, about, than the last loan in which the state's quota was $17,500,000. At the same time the last loan was over-subscribed, the total being $27,500,000 or ten millions more than her quota. At the same time the coming loan will be more than two-and-one-half times the last one and will require that every one who can dig deep. It will require subscriptions equalling $50, for every person big and little in the state. However, there is nearly three months in which to save and get ready to do each and every of us our full part.

A news story in today's Capital Journal tells how a single Salem cannery is putting up 90,000 cans of fruit daily. This only illustrates the magnitude of the fruit industry centered at Salem—far in the lead of any other city in the Northwest. Probably our canneries, evaporators and juice plants are now employing 1500 hands, and this is in addition to the thousands who are picking the crops.

Foreign Minister Von Kuehlmann of Germany has tendered his resignation and it has been accepted. He stated the war could not be won on the battlefield, and as the kaiser had but a few days before insisted it could, he was guilty of lese majesty. The kaiser is the only person in the empire who dares say what he believes, unless it is Hindenburg or Ludendorff, and they say what they would like to believe—and don't.

The wets lost out Wednesday when the senate voted to attach the prohibition amendment to the agricultural bill as a rider, and it was done by a vote of 36 to 33. This clears the road for immediate passage, and this is expected soon. That the house will concur is taken as a foregone conclusion, so the only hope the wets have left is that the president may veto the bill. This looks like a forlorn hope, and that a bone dry United States is probable by the beginning of 1919.

The Oregonian condemns the primary law for not providing some means by which the objects and aims of the party can be expressed. What more does it want than is now provided? Does not every candidate have a chance to make a small platform of his own? And then there is the individual slogan with which he goes forth to "slog," and win votes.

Oregon merchants are now permitted to purchase flour in amounts not to exceed supplies for sixty days. The only trouble about the new arrangement is that there is no flour to purchase. It will be some time yet before the new wheat gets to the mills and out again in the shape of flour.

King Albert of Belgium and his queen visited England last Saturday making the trip across the channel in an airship. They are the first royal couple to go visiting by that route, and as Earl Curzon remarked were the first king and queen to land in England from the skies.

INTO GERMANY

WALT MASON

I hope before this war is done, and we've suppressed the frightful Hun, our men will march on German soil, and sundry treasured landmarks spoil. The German people ought to know just how it feels to have a foe shoot up their houses and their kirks and overturn the whole blamed works. They should be given half a chance to see what deeds were wrought in France, their cities made an aching void, their sauerkraut factories destroyed; they ought to see the bombshells burst among their fields of weinerwurst and see the flash of snickersneezes beneath their waving pretzel trees. I would not advocate their plan of dealing death to dame and man, of slaying babes and hanging priests, for allied soldiers are not beasts; but I would see our men in line somewhere along the storied Rhine, and have them rake the country well, and show the Teuts that war is hell. Unless we bring it to their door, they'll soon forget the years of gore, and say it's what they're yearning for, when some mad ruler lusts for war. Oh, let the Teutons have enough of all this blood and carnage stuff.

After Constipation —What?

Constipation is not merely a local and temporary derangement—it affects the entire system as it becomes chronic.

First, it creates intestinal poisons, which foul the blood and lessen the vitality. Then come the indirect and more insidious troubles, such as Anemia, Diabetes, Dyspepsia, Gastritis, Intestinal Catarrh, Piles and Hardening of the Arteries.

The Woman Who Changed

AN AWKWARD ENCOUNTER.

CHAPTER CXXVIII.

"I just met George and he said you were in here alone, and, as I have had no luncheon, I told him I should join you," she said, with an air of surety that amazed me. She knew I did not like her—that I never willingly went where she was—that I had, on more than one occasion, shown my dislike so plainly she could not help but see it; yet she had the audacity to force herself upon me.

"I am nearly finished, myself," I told her, as coldly as I could speak. "Mr. Howard was finished when I came in, so I ordered very little. I did not breakfast nearly ten."

"Why didn't you join us last night?" "I have been very ill, and have not been sitting up late."

"Oh, but you WERE up; I saw you looking in at the grill room door." "I never had been so absolutely unwell as in my life. My face turned crimson, I knew. How I hated this woman; before I could frame an answer, she went on in a mocking voice:

"I didn't tell on you, so don't look so distressed."

"Helen Regains Her Coolness." "Tell me? I do not understand, Mrs. Collins," I said calmly.

"Oh, don't pretend you didn't run so that George wouldn't see you—or was it because you were cross, that he hadn't asked you to join the party?"

"I don't believe there ever lived anyone who felt more like committing murder than I did, at that minute. Yet, I managed to keep cool. I had spoken of my husband as 'Mr. Howard' each time, but she persistently ignored it and continued to call him 'George.' This always angered me, and it did so now.

"How do you know he hadn't asked me to join the party?" I asked. I would see how far this woman was in my husband's confidence—just how intimate they were, how much she knew of our relations.

"Simply enough! Because he said so." "Mr. Howard knows I am not well enough to remain up until three o'clock in the morning," I would tell her now; that I was aware of the time he returned. She laughed tantalizingly:

"I see, you were awake! You might as well be up having a good time, as lying in bed worrying."

"Worrying! That was the last thing I thought of doing. Why should I worry? Where the strength came to parry this unkind woman's thrusts, I never shall know. But I felt like a different being. I had borne all that I should bear, and she knew it. From this time on I would be different! I had often heard of the 'last straw'; well, George's leaving me alone while he spent his time with her, on the night before, and now her insulting words and manner, were the 'last straw' with me. George had wanted me to be different. I would be! He would see that I was changed, and others—principally Julia Collins and her set—should see it also.

"Most women worry, when they are left out," she said, but I saw the look of astonishment come into her face, even though she quickly masked it.

"Yes, when they are jealous of anyone with whom their husbands happen to be. But when one feels as I do—that, because of many things, my husband prefers me to anyone else—there is no cause for worry."

"You are very sure of George!" she scarcely hid the sneer by her short laugh.

"I am! You see Mr. Howard had known all you Moreland women long before he met me. Had he preferred you, he would not have asked me to marry him. That is a self-evident fact, so needs no explaining. And most men I notice, prefer to marry a young woman, rather than one of their age or older."

The blank amazement in Mrs. Collins face told me I had hit home, and gave me such courage as I had never felt since my marriage.

"One would think George a Methuselah, and his friends the same age, to hear you talk!"

"No—Mr. Howard is quite a young man, and of course his friends are quite young also. But, as I said, he had known them long before he knew me; and he evidently preferred a woman much younger than one his own age, or a trifle older." I had an idea that Julia Collins was a little older than she acknowledged, and when she flushed angrily I was positive that I was right.

"You are to be congratulated on having such entire faith in your own attractions," she said, just as the waiter brought me my check. Then she added: "You haven't thanked me for not giving you away last night."

"I have nothing to thank you for. Mr. Howard knows you saw me." I told her untruthfully, but feeling no regret that I had prevailed.

Forty-Cents per Hour Fixed As Living Wage

Washington, July 12.—Forty cents an hour was declared to be a "living wage" by the national war labor board in a decision today affecting workers at eight plants in Wayneboro, Pa.

A basic eight hour day was ordered to become effective immediately at both plants of the Worthington Pump and Machinery company at East Cambridge, Mass., and Buffalo, N. Y.

The position taken by the board may result in a readjustment of government contracts and sub-contracts which are now on a basis of a ten hour day.

If the eight hour day is adopted by the government, the boards decision would affect hundreds of thousands of workers in private plants engaged in war work.

YOUR HEALTH

By ANDREW F. CURRIER, M. D.

Bright's Disease No. 2.

Some of the causes of chronic Bright's disease are hereditary taints of various kinds, malarial or lead poisoning, rheumatism, gout, anxiety, grief, prolonged and severe cold, and excesses in eating and drinking, especially the immoderate use of fermented and distilled liquors.

Attention to the disease may first be aroused by prolonged and troublesome indigestion and by the fact that the urine is unusually abundant or unusually scanty.

When the urine is examined it will be found very acid and of low specific gravity. It will contain more or less albumen and will have casts or mounds of the tubules of the kidney, indicating the existence of destructive changes.

Or there may be an attack of pneumonia or of pericarditis, and when the heart is examined it will be found enlarged as the result of its efforts to try and compensate for the damage that is being done.

The sight may become weak and blurred and when the retina of the eye is examined by an oculist he will find the changes which are characteristic of chronic nephritis.

Then emaciation may follow with swelling of the legs and ankles and puffiness of the face, the arteries harden, the blood pressure reaches 200 or more, and the skin becomes irritable and covered with a troublesome eruption.

Headache becomes frequent and troublesome and some day the patient has an apoplexy or a convulsion which may be preceded by nausea, and vomiting, difficult breathing and drowsiness.

Perhaps there will be recovery from this attack and the patient may be quite comfortable for some time, especially with rest and good care, but the changes in the kidneys are going on and they become less and less capable of filtering

Headache becomes frequent and troublesome and some day the patient has an apoplexy or a convulsion which may be preceded by nausea, and vomiting, difficult breathing and drowsiness.

Perhaps there will be recovery from this attack and the patient may be quite comfortable for some time, especially with rest and good care, but the changes in the kidneys are going on and they become less and less capable of filtering out the poisons from the blood so that eventually uraemia or an uraemic convulsion will bring the story to an end.

Those who suffer with this disease must live quietly and simply in a dry and sunny climate if possible, avoiding exposure to fatigue, wet, and cold.

They may take moderate exercise but must avoid indigestible food and live mainly on milk, fruit and vegetables.

This may enable them to live very comfortably for many years. It must always be remembered that the patent medicines which are advertised to cure kidney disease have no curative value, and the same is pretty nearly true of all other medicines except those which may be required in certain emergencies.

A few years ago an acquaintance of mine proposed to remove the capsule or outer covering of the kidneys as a cure for Bright's disease.

He carefully studied the hundred or more cases upon which he operated, but his conclusions were not sufficiently impressive to give the operation standing and popularity.

It does not seem to me to have been founded upon correct anatomical principles, and it has apparently gone the way of so many other attempts to do the impossible.

Questions and Answers
A. J. W.—Our baby is bottle fed and at present is also receiving a patented food, but his bowels have been obstinately constipated. Is there no treatment which can be used to relieve this difficulty?

Answer—I do not believe in the use of suppositories for babies if they can be avoided. Preferably give the child a half teaspoonful to a teaspoonful of castor oil, every night before bed time.
