INTELLECTUALITY is a good thing for women to possess. Good hard horse sense is better, but the best thing that any woman can be endowed with by nature is woman sense," declares Dorothy Dix, one of the most most fascinating actresses in filmdom. Woman's intuition as it is generally known, isn't any kind of education that can be taught from books, or knowledge, nor is it a talent. It is an undeniably condition which exists within one's self. It isn't merely a fascination. It is something deeper and broader and more comprehensive than any of these—a subtle something, a guiding force, that always enables a woman to choose the right path and that leads her to success in life.

When the good fairy bends above a girl baby's crib the supreme gift that she leaves in the dimpled hand is not beauty nor genius nor wealth. It is woman's sense.

It is woman sense that teaches a woman how to make the most of her womanhood and to recognize that there are certain immutable laws of sexes that cannot be altered. Therefore, the woman who possesses this sense makes herself a first class woman instead of trying to be a second class imitation man. She wears woman's clothes and adds a few feminine frills, which makes them into a most charming wearing apparel. Instead of donning some masculine attire, which only belittles her inmost self. She cultivates the manner of a lady, instead of that of a stable boy. Woman sense teaches woman that the masculine woman is just as much a thing of horror as the effeminate man.

Having selected her vocation the woman sense goes about it in a decent, womanly way. She does not have to be fellow-well-met with all her masculine fellow workers or is it necessary for her to go about with a pruned and prim expression, on her face as if she was expecting insult at every turn.

In matrimony an ounce of woman's sense is worth tons and tons of all the standard virtues for it is the one thing that enables a woman to make marriage a success. It is the iron hand in the velvet glove that makes it possible for a woman to manage her husband and rule her household with out her disposition even being suspected.

It is the woman sense that makes a woman realize all men have a certain childlike vanity that chiefly exhibits itself desiring to pose as the head of the house. Therefore the woman who has woman sense or intuition never arrogates that empty honor to her self. She never says "I did so and so" or "I have decided to do this or that" no matter how much the case may be.

Also she always prefaces every remark, in her husbands hearing with "John says so and so" or "John decided this or that". Also she makes a point to consult John upon everything from the shape of her hats to how the children shall be educated, this is merely to please John.

It is woman sense that teaches her that the biggest man and the cleverest one and the strongest one is also the biggest baby and that he wants the woman he loves to pet him, mother him and show him off before company.

It is woman sense that makes women perceive that woman cannot shock public opinion or not go against established conventions without hurting themselves. They must take the way around. It is the inner sense of intuition that teaches women to be womanly and it is one of the greatest helps or boost along the rocky road to success, which the women of today are climbing. The condition made possible by the world's war, is putting women in men's places to do men's work, but not to take their places as men.
