GOLF IN CANADA THE WHOLE YEAR ROUND

On the Tee at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea
It is almost as necessary to keep the morale of the great citizen army at home as it is to keep up the morale of the army of fighters at the front. That is why theaters are open, why baseball has its devotees, and why golf is still played. The men who support the Liberty Loan, and the Victory Loan, also the Red Cross and other great war activities, need exercise and amusement to keep them running at top speed in the great game of business. The golfers of the United States and Canada have given vast sums to the Red Cross; ambulances bearing the names of clubs are in service at home and abroad; and golfers have not only given freely of their money, but hundreds of them have died in the armies of Great Britain, Canada, France, and the United States. More than 3,500 golfers in Canada have gone overseas to fight, and more than 200 of them have made the supreme sacrifice.
It may be news to some golfers that in British Columbia a golfer can pursue his favorite sport the whole year around. There are no winter-killed greens in Victoria or Vancouver. The Victoria Golf Club was established in 1898, and its seaside links at Oak Bay constitute one of the finest tests of golf in Canada. In addition to this course, Victoria has the Cotwood Golf and Country Club, one of the finest inland golf courses in America and the United Service Club, a very good nine-hole course.
The city of Vancouver is also a golf center with several clubs, notably the Shaughnessy Heights Golf Club, an eighteen-hole course well trapped and bunkered. This course is named in honor of Lord Shaughnessy, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who is himself an ardent golfer. Other excellent clubs at Vancouver are the Jericho Country Club and the Vancouver Golf and Country Club.
There are scores of other splendid golf clubs in Canada, including the Royal Montreal Golf Club, which was established in 1878, fifteen years before the St. Andrews Golf Club, Yonkers, N. Y., was opened as the first golf club in the United States.
