the vice president for the president during the latter's absence, Chairman Webb indicated today:

Have Devised no Substitute

Hitchcock said that neither he nor other democratic leaders had devised any plan as a substitute for the Cummins' resolution as a means of keeping the senate informed of developments.

"I believe the senate will have full information," said Hitchcock. "The discussion here, I feel, will have considerable influence abroad, as reflecting American public opinion on the questions under discussion."

Republican opposition to the Cummins plan grew today. Senator Watson, leading republican, declared "the senate must keep its head and do nothing to alienate the country."

Other republicans said they will vote against the Cummins resolution. Generally expressed republican view of President Wilson's message was that it was disappointing with respect to filling the demand for further light on certain of the 14 principles of peace terms. Republicans say they expected some definition of freedom of the seas amplification of the league of nations plan, and a statement of just how the president expects to impress his views abroad.

Already Explained Principles

Replying to expressions, Senator Lewis, democratic whip said:

"President Wilson already has explained his peace terms, it seems to me, so that the thinking men can understand what they mean. As to the freedom of the seas, there may be some vagueness, but that grows out of the fact that no satisfactory definition has ever been evolved on that point by anybody. The president is preserving a wise measure of reticence, so as not to tell the enemy all he hopes to do nor how he hopes to do it. That would be poor strategy."

On this point Senator Hitchcock called attention to the fact that when the 14 peace terms were first enunciated "there was no adverse comment, but much that was favorable. The assumption rightly follows that the terms were accepted by the American people as an expression of their views and so long as President Wilson stays with those 14 terms, I don't see that he will be doing anything extraordinary."

Define Peace Aims

The Knox resolution also would define America's peace aims and defer until later the formation of a league of nations and definition of freedom of the seas.

Sherman, Illinois, obtained unanimous consent to speak and declared that under the constitution, the president's departure rendered his office vacant and left congress powerless to enact legislation.

Mann's advice in the house was received by the house and senate republicans with the comment that they are not seeking to obstruct the president, but to aid him in expressing the real sentiment of the country.

Sherman, before making his attack on the president, introduced a resolution declaring that office vacant for the remainder of the term and providing that Vice President Marshall shall assume Wilson's duties.

The Knox resolution stated that "the United States entered the war to vindicate the ancient rights of navigation and to remove forever the German menace to our peace. The surrender of Germany and Austria-Hungary has attained a great part, and has rendered enforceable the remainder of those aims."

Then Safeguard Aims

"The purpose of the United States in the peace conference should be confined to the aforementioned aims and matters germane thereto."

Russell Hill of Portland and Jerome Sacks of Roseburg, the last two of the 13 boys who made a break from the Oregon state training school for boys last Friday, were returned to the school late last night. They stole Lott L. Pearce's automobile and drove to Portland where they went to the home of Hill's parents. The boy's fathers put them back into the stolen automobile and drove to Salem, turning the boys over to the school authorities and returning the automobile to its owner.

C. J. Green, captain in the coast artillery, now stationed at camp Upton, New York, expects to be mustered out and will return to Salem to resume his work as engineer for the state public service commission. The commission has informed him that his place will be waiting for him.

Captain W. J. Clarke is another one of the commission's engineers who will be expected back before long. He is now in France with the engineer corps.

"Many times I have been called a bone-head or a block head," said Labor Commissioner O. P. Hoff today, "but now I have proof that such names are a slander."

Commissioner Hoff pointed to the surgical dressing which stretched across his forehead.

"The other night I thought I would find out if I really did have a bone-head," he continued, "and I bumped into a door. Well, sir, it never even dented the door, but left a gash on my forehead. So now I know I have been slandered. Of course, this happened in the dark and I didn't see the door until after I had made the experiment."

fining to the aforementioned aims and matters germane thereto.

"For the safeguarding of those aims, the first essential is a definite understanding that the same necessity arising in the future, there shall be the same complete accord and cooperation with our chief co-belligerents for the defense of civilization."

"Any project for any general league of nations for any sweeping change in the ancient laws of the sea hitherto recognized as international law and violated by the Teutonic powers, should be postponed for separate consideration, not alone by the victorious belligerents but by all the nations, if at some future time general conferences on those subjects might be deemed useful."

"Immediately upon compliance with the terms of the armistice and the gear anted attainment of the war aims as aforesaid, the army and navy of the United States should be withdrawn from foreign territories and waters except insofar as their retention might be temporarily necessary to establish the status contemplated by the armistice."

Wants Powers Withdrawn

"The extraordinary powers conferred upon the president for the prosecution of the war should be withdrawn and the country restored to a normal condition of peace with the greatest possible celerity consistent with the national interest."

"The president of the United States is not a president of France," declared Sherman, urging the passage of his resolution. "There he is but an alien. He has no power of his own to transfer of his own volition, the seat of government to some province alien."

Senator Williams objected to Sherman's statement that the president, in going outside the country was violating traditions that have existed since George Washington's time.

"The people of this republic are entitled to the personal presence of their president," Sherman continued. "His absence for many weeks in a distant land warrants passage of the resolution."

Sherman also said that the court reception in every country to be visited by the president and the language he would be sure to receive was a dangerous thing for the head of a republic.

"The courteous smile and the bent knee of a sycophant has often exalted a nation into entangling alliances and the kiss of a dissolute woman has been known to change the course of an empire. Let us not subject him to temptation," said Sherman.

Sherman declared that in case of a great national emergency, there would be no one in authority to order out troops and that other emergencies were likely to arise that would necessitate the presence of some one with full power to act.

Nonsense Says Williams

"All talk about loss of sovereignty while the president is abroad is absolute nonsense," said Senator Williams, replying to Sherman.

"If the framers of the constitution had believed temporary absence from the country constituted inability to perform the duties of the presidency, they would have said so.

"I doubt if any man of real common sense believes Wilson is doing anything wrong. The president knows it is well for him to have a heart to heart talk with Clemenceau, Lloyd-George, Orlando and King Albert. And must he communicate it all to the august senator from Illinois before breakfast every day?"

Galleries applauded when Williams said Sherman would have done better had he accepted Wilson's views, instead of standing up for his own so emphatically.

"Need Harmony Now

"Harmony now is the great need," said Williams, "so that we will not make asses of ourselves like the Balkan nations by fighting among ourselves after we've whipped the foe."

Williams charged senate republicans had a "gentleman's agreement" not to applaud President Wilson's message yesterday.

"Some of you republicans think you beat the president at the recent election, but you didn't," said Williams.

"The American people beat the democratic party because on a percentage basis, republicans were truer to the war than democrats were."

Williams charged that the attacks by the republicans on President Wilson were inspired by "blind partisan hate" that would be hurled back at them later by the American people.

He said he believed, however, there was no reason to expect any general objection to the plan.
