NAVAL SUPREMACY.

Great Britain, according to all authoritative reports from London, is determined to maintain her naval supremacy.

With Germany reduced to naval impotence, and Japan and France left far behind by the growth of our own navy, the United States is the only power worthy of being regarded as a real competitor of Great Britain.

Thus there are at the close of the world war only two great naval powers, Britain and America.

We have long been friends. The British navy has done us many a good turn, particularly during the present war, when she stood so long between Germany and the Western Hemisphere. We are better friends today than ever before. On both sides we hope to remain friends.

But as long as the British navy is larger than ours, the United States will never feel perfectly at ease. Like wise as long as we keep adding to our fleet, Great Britain will never feel perfectly at ease. Unless the system is radically changed, there is in sight a period of rivalry between these two friendly powers, piling armament on armament after the old method, and possibly with accelerated speed.

Such a course is almost sure to lead to disaster sooner or later. At best it will be a vast and needless drain upon the resources of the two powers. But is there any other way—unless both powers will agree to a severe limitation of their own armament and the establishment of a supreme naval peace fleet under the authority of a League of Nations?

Many persons call this solution visionary. But isn't it one of the things for which we fought this war?

In an editorial in the Capital Journal last evening on government insurance, as the outgrowth of the war, forty billion dollars in policies was printed as forty million, through an oversight in proof-reading. Four billion, the resources of the largest private insurance company, was printed as four million.

A morning paper, in speaking of the kaiser taking refuge in Holland, quotes the Dutch premier as follows: "After renunciation of his throne there could be no question of his interment." It is to be hoped that the premier's source of information is authentic.

President Wilson landed on French soil today and his Friday, the 13th, luck was with him as usual. The dreary rain of days stopped, the fog lifted and the sunshine was bright and cheerful as he stepped ashore.

END OF HATING.

My heart is full of joy and mirth, I do not hate a soul on earth. Before the armistice was signed, hate of the Teuton filled my mind; I hated everything that bore the German trade mark, more and more. Alas, the hate I used to feel, before and after every meal! And when to bed I journeyed late, I'd lie awake, and hate and hate! I thought that I should never live to see the time when I'd forgive the cruel Hun of evil works, the Bulgars and the beastly Turks. I don't forgive them even yet; I won't make any Teut my pet, or carry lilies, pure and pale, to any Hun who is in jail. My aunt shall not become the bride of any Turk with sallow hide. I'm willing that the Turk and Hun may have forgiveness—when it's won; but years must pass in solemn train before they can our trust regain. Now I don't hate them any more; I've found that hatred is a bore. The tyrant's taken in his sign; he goes his way and I go mine; and if I hated him by day, and hating passed the night away, I couldn't add an ounce, I trow, to that huge load he's bearing now.

United States Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, wants this country to let the murderous bolsheviki of Russia control that country without interference from the allies. Probably this is the first time murder, outrage and anarchy were openly championed on the floor of the upper house of congress. And it ought to be the last time.

The Red Cross reports that it is sending 15,000,000 packages of chewing gum to France monthly. This is the first public intimation of the general employment of typewriters and telephone operators over there.

Those grateful and enthusiastic Frenchmen are very likely to give Woodrow Wilson the real time of all his somewhat eventful life, during the next few weeks.

RUTH ARGUES WITH BRIAN

CHAPTER CIX.

When Brian said he was going to enlist with the Canadians, Ruth simply stood still and stared at him. But every vestige of color had left her face, and after a moment she swayed slightly. Brian thought she was going to faint, and put his arm about her. She shivered, and drew slightly away.

"Will you say that again—the whole of it?"

"I said you would not have to pay rent for me much longer—that I was going to enlist with the Canadians."

"You mean that?"

"Yes."

"And it is because I paid the rent?"

"Oh, Brian."

"Not—not entirely—the—if you hadn't—perhaps I wouldn't have gone unless Uncle Sam got into the scrap. But you can take care of yourself, better care than I can of you. You don't need me, and the army does."

"I don't—need you?"

"No. You never really have. From the very first, you have been able to earn more than I did; to provide your self with things I could not have hoped to give you for years—if ever. I realize that I am not, never shall be, a success—as far as making big money goes. I thought when I married you that I was going to become a big lawyer, your, his tone was contemptuous and bitter, but you took all necessity for pushing myself away from me. I could have braced up for you—not for my-which you often pay for, and so on. Nice position for a man to be in, isn't it? Do you wonder that I cannot bring myself to let more people know than my wife supports me in a style in which I could not support her? It is unbearable that it should go on. Unthinkable that I should not take the first opportunity that offers to escape from such a humiliating position."

"But Brian—"

"There is no use talking any longer. My mind is made up. We have talked of, quarreled over, this money question until I am tired and sick of the very word 'money.' I would rather live in one room and cook the meals myself than go on."

"As Mollie King does?"

Ruth never could have explained what made her ask that question. She had not thought of Mollie while Brian had been talking; she had not in any way connected her with Brian's decision. The question had slipped out.

"Yes, if you will, just like Mollie King does. She, at least, spools one's life by aspiring to things beyond her reach. Just why you should bring her into this, I can't see."

"I didn't mean anything. I spoke without thinking."

"Since you have referred to her, I may as well tell you that Mollie is going over too—she is going as a nurse. For six months she has been training."

"Mollie King is going too?" once more Ruth seemed unable to grasp what she had been told.

"Yes, Mollie is going—too."

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take Tablespoonful Of Salts If Back Hurts Or Bladder Bothers—Drink Lots Of Water.

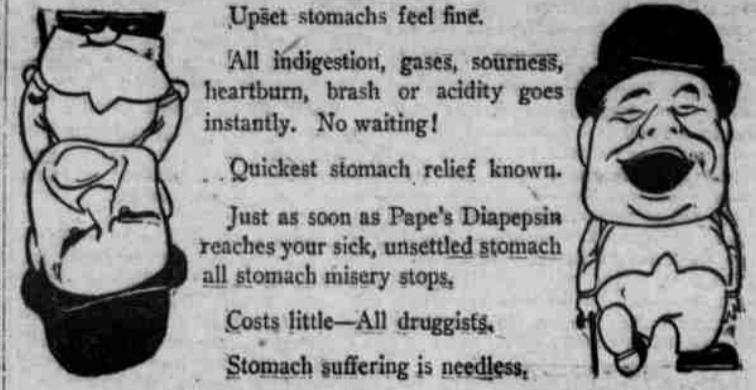

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night, when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jai Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jai Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a "light" effervescent lithia water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

There is a monster slab which covers a sepulcher—But let us watch the hazy spot. It's moving swiftly now. What are those streaks of red? It's raining drops of blood! Right on that old stone slab! The misty veil is lifting, And reveals a human form, His nails are long and claw-like, His horns—he is de-horned, And shrinks back 'mong the shadows. Another form appears, In clinging robes of pure whiteness, Wearing the victory crown, Drifting slowly downward Right to the sepulcher, An angel— He's rolling the stone away— Listen. Miss Christian Endeavor Died and was buried, But is risen. "O, Death, where is thy sting! O, grave, where is thy victory?"

Grover C. Bellinger has been appointed executor of the estate of John Aide. He died Oct. 19, 1918. The estate is valued at $600.

The estate of Henry Schmidt has been appraised at $300. The appraisers were D. D. Sociofoky, M. J. Cerrik and Hazelle Gearhart. The estate consisted of an undivided one fourth interest in 15 acres in the Catherine Huges donation land claim.

Far in the distant background The clouds look dark and gloomy. But changing just a bit And in the middle distance A ray of light is breaking through; Yet, somehow, there's a hazy spot— Old picture, not a tree, nor a shrub— All lights and shadows. Most like a hazy ground. In the center foreground.
