One of the new jobs awaiting women and for which there is now a great demand, is that of librarian. Just at present not only in Oregon but everywhere there is a great shortage of librarians. Before the war many who were of literary turn were attracted to the work but when the big corporations began putting in libraries they were not willing to pay fair living salaries, and now public libraries they failed to appreciate the service are finding it no one willing to work at salaries offered. Hence Oregon as well as other states are calling for librarians. Miss Cordelia Marvin has been appointed by several libraries for aid but she has found the shortage of qualified persons the same in the east as in Oregon. All of which inclines Miss Marvin to think that city libraries will be obliged to meet competition and pay salaries to librarians corresponding to the training and ability.
