The river is acting rather queer these days. Ordinarily when it has reached a flood stage and begins to recede, it just keeps on receding. During the present high water the flood stage was Monday morning at 18.6 feet. Then the water fell to 17.5 feet Tuesday morning and 17.4 feet this morning. But the rains of the past 24 hours have added another volume of water and at 1 o'clock today, the river had risen to 18 feet.

The subsidence of the influenza epidemic is marked by the final clearing up of all the waiting list of funerals at the undertaking parlors. DISCONTENT APPEARS OVER FLU SITUATION

Business Interests Want Restrictions Off And Quarantine Enforced.

A certain Presbyterian elder in Salem put the influenza situation about right when he said that the board of health and the city authorities had been in about as embarrassing a position as the Almighty when Deacon Jones, on one side of the fence, prayed most devoutly that it might rain on his perishing corn, while Elder Brown, on the other side of the fence, was praying just as devoutly that it might not rain on his new-mown hay.

For more than ten weeks the authorities have been confronted with a demand for rigid enforcement of the closing order to prevent the spread of the epidemic and the newspapers have lent their influence in warning the populace against carelessness. On the other hand there are scores of business houses that have seen people frightened away from Salem, business stagnated, and big deficits rolling up week after week. No person not in business can obtain any adequate idea of the permanent loss that has been caused through this situation. There are business firms here who have lost from $20 to $50 a day throughout this siege. Not only has loss been caused directly by sickness and death; the worst phase of the situation is that hundreds of people have kept away from Salem with the misguided idea that they were more liable to contract the disease by coming here than they would by going elsewhere.

It is not to be wondered at that there has grown up a loud demand from the business interests that the restrictions upon business be removed and that they be more rigidly enforced upon influenza victims in all stages of the disease. There are many substantial business men who have maintained that if there had been more drastic enforcement of quarantine regulations the public institutions of the city might have been kept in operation under certain restrictions.

For these reasons much interest centered upon the conference between the local authorities and Dr. Seeley at the high school building this morning. This meeting was attended by teachers, physicians, representatives of the university faculty and of the business college to whom Dr. Seeley made a careful survey of the situation and gave a very suggestive talk as to the best methods of dealing with the epidemic. But contrary to general expectations, Dr. Seeley made no suggestions or recommendations as to immediate lifting of the ban, however, much heavy by in sympathy with the business interests. It has been generally assumed that this meeting would pave the way for an immediate opening of the town, but it would appear that the medical fraternity of the city were decidedly opposed to any such action. As the initiative and power to act has been conferred upon the board of health and the committee of physicians associated with them, it appears that they hold the key to the situation in their hands. It requires no prophet to foresee a vigorous protest from the business interests, unless there is some promise of immediate relief from the present conditions.

If anyone has any doubt as to how much the Salem public library is appreciated by the public they should take a note of the manner in which Market Reflected State Of Wall Street's Opinion New York, Jan. 22.—The New York Evening Sun financial review today says: Today's stock market reflected the unsettled state of Wall Street's opinions on present conditions and future prospects alike. It was difficult for prices to maintain a given course for long. Yesterday the market opened down, was subjected to selling pressure through the forenoon and then recovered, at least the industrial list did. Today it sold higher through the first half of the session, reacted at midday and in the early afternoon again showed signs of stiffening. The oils were boomed, Mexican Petroleum and Texas and Pacific in particular. The steels were in excellent form with especial strength in Bethlehem B and United States Steel for purely technical reasons; they have been overvalued.
