Sound country where seed-raising has become a big industry. Sure, the Oregon coast country is just as well adapted for these lines, but for some reason brewers, even at the highest price ever known, will not stimulate the planting of new aereage in this valley. It requires two or three years to develop a bearing hopyard. Not only that, but the high prices are going to stimulate hop planting in England. The manufacture of "near-beers" in this counfacture of "near-beers" in this country might create a considerable market for hops, but there is no telling when congress will see fit to remove the restrictions on the use of foodstuffs. The hop men might have made a big stake on the European market if they had been allowed to harvest their crops last fall, but the banks refused and agree money for the nickers un to advance money for the pickers under the conditions at that time."
