WEALTHY LIVESTOCK MEN BEHIND ACTION AGAINST PACKERS

These Are Charges Made By Edward Morris.—Referred To "Subtle Seven"

By Raymond Clapper (United Press Staff Correspondent.)
 Washington, Jan. 27.—Wealthy agents of livestock growers are behind attempts to legislate against the big packers, Edward Morris charged today. He referred to the "subtle seven" members of the market committee of the American National Livestock association, declaring them responsible for the federal trade commission's probe and the resulting bills to regulate the packers.

This organization, Morris said, raises $150,000 annually. Morris read a prepared statement before the house interstate commerce committee. Attorneys and advisers set just behind him.

"I have known for some time that some financial life blood has been responsible for the propaganda which has been sweeping the country against the packing interests," Morris declared, reading from the prepared statement.

"The 'subtle seven' were not named. We have remained silent through years of abuse," said Morris. The packers stand before the American people with clean hands.

"I do not charge, or even intimate, that this fund was used for any improper purpose," he continued, referring to the livestock association's annual income. "But it, also would make it rather dangerous if it should happen to get into any improper channel. Whether this $150,000 fund had been the inspiational source of the anti-packer crusade, I do not know."

Armour Admits Control.
 Washington, Jan. 27.—Packers' control over the buying of hogs and cattle, J. Ogden Armour admitted under questioning by Francis J. Heney today before the senate agricultural committee.

Chicago packers kept in constant touch with their buyers at Fort Worth, Kansas City, Omaha, Sioux City and St. Paul, Armour said.

Heney charges packers with attempting to control livestock associations.

With Armour as a reluctant witness, Heney attempted to trace the network by which he alleged the packers have tried to tighten their hold on the market and to reinforce their financial interests.

He delved into alleged packer control of streetcar lines at Kansas City and Sioux City, banks in all packing cities, canneries on the Pacific coast and vast tracts of irrigated lands in California.

Armour showed signs of irritation. Heney developed the following:

Armour, Swift and Morris have joint interests in the Western Meat company of San Francisco.

Cuddey and Wilson are the only big packers owning individual plants in California.

Charges were made that Armour, Swift and Morris refused to compete in California because of their joint hold.

COOPERATIVE IDEA IN DAIRYING SUCCESS

Garden Road Cheese Company Illustrates Adaptability Of Plan.

The cooperative idea has proven a boon to many a farming community in the northwest. It has been carried out through the Grange, through the Agricultural council, and the cooperative creameries and cheese factories. And now is the time when it should be the greatest factor in solving the difficulties of the Marlon county farmer and dairyman. Cooperative buying, producing and selling may prove his salvation in the present condition of the markets.

A case in point is the Garden Road Cooperative Cheese Co. One of the stockholders makes the following statement:

"The farmers of the Cooperative Creamery have been reaping some mighty big profits lately, with butterfat bringing 53 cents a pound. This also applies to patrons, and it is anticipated that the company will be paying dividends in the near future. Besides getting the highest price for their butterfat the patrons are entitled to their percentage of whey, which can be fed to hogs with wonderful results. The cheese market has been so strong that it has been impossible for the company to fill its orders, and cheese experts predict that the industry will continue to be good for years to come.

"The Garden Road company is strictly a farmer's concern. There is no middleman and all the profits go to themselves. They hire their own cheese maker by the month.

"The time has come when farmers are getting wise to the benefit of organization and are saving all the profits, where on the other hand the middleman takes all the profit. Large dairies, depending on the factories, convert their raw material into a product of value, should take an interest in this organization so as to obtain for them the highest price for milk. The company has in their employ an expert cheese maker, and the entire output of the factory has been going to local dealers for the last two months. There has been some rumor that the factory was on the verge of bankruptcy but this comes from some ignorant bores, and is without foundation."
