The Salem-Kings Product Co., has been closed down temporarily on account of the shortage of products. Carrots form one of the principal materials for the plant at the present time, and it is found that it is almost impossible for the growers to get upon the fields to dig them on account of the flooded condition. The plant is still occupied with a big government contract and as soon as vegetables can be delivered in quantity they will start up again with a full force.

The river is rapidly returning normal conditions even for January. Sunday morning it had fallen to 16 feet above and this morning to below 12 feet. Since the rains stopped, the water has been receding at the rate of about 3/4 feet every 24 hours. During the rainy spell of December, 1917, the water reached a high stage of 24 feet. This time 21 feet was the high water mark.

Last week a bill was introduced in the house of representatives of the Oregon legislature asking that the war department give the state two cannon captured from the Germans and also providing for the erection of an heroic statue in honor of the Oregon boys who had fought in the war. Representative Hawley on January 18 introduced into the house of representatives at Washington the following bill: "Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States in congress assembled—That the secretary of war be, and is hereby authorized and directed to donate to the city of Salem, Marion county, state of Oregon, one cannon or field piece captured by the American army from the forces of the Imperial German government during the present war."

The aero club of the northwest, with headquarters at Seattle is securing information for the establishing of airplane landing stations in the Willamette valley. The club is compiling data with respect to air currents and air routes for commercial and passenger flying and would like information as to whether the city of Salem has any facilities or grounds at present which will permit the landing of airplanes. Also whether we have any facilities for flying boats or seaplanes. The club would like to know whether if these facilities do not exist, if a flying field can be established in the city or immediate vicinity. Sometime ago when inquiries were made in regard to a 40 acre landing station near Salem, several who were interested, endeavored to find a suitable tract that would permit an aviator to land at the usual running speed and none was found. At that time, it was suggested that with some clearing, the Bush pasture was about the most available spot in or near the city for an airplane landing station.

Virgil G. Golden, generally known to his friends here in town as Tommy Golden, reached New Jersey Saturday according to a telegram received by his parents. Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Golden of 1395 Saginaw. He has been in a French hospital for the past four months having been injured in some of the fierce fighting in the Argonne forests. He was originally a member of Salem company M., that was sent to France, but was later transferred to the 32d division of Wisconsin and Michigan troops. It will be remembered that this division was in the toughest fighting not only in the Argonne forests but at Chateau Thierry and at St. Mihiel. It was the 32d division that suffered so heavily along with the 35th from Kansas. Shortly before leaving, Mr. Golden was a student at the high school.

According to the climatological map just issued by the Portland weather bureau for the month of December, 1918, Salem was not such a wet spot in the state as several, especially in coast sections which experienced real rainy weather. While the rainfall in December at Salem amounted to 3.76 inches, Astoria, for the same month got 11.22 inches and Deadwood, along the coast 10.05 inches. Tillamook had 10.59 inches for December and Marshfield 7.49. Mt. Angel experienced heavier rains than Salem as its precipitation for the month was 4.95 inches, but Newport lined up with the west coast regions with 9.11 inches. For the eastern part of the state, the month of December means a dry and almost rainless month. At Baker the rainfall was .30 of an inch, at La Grande, .76 of an inch, Klamath Falls, .55 of an inch and at The Dalles, 1.01 inches. The average rainfall for the state as shown by the 112 recording stations was 3.25 inches. Astoria is at the head of the list with 11.22 inches during December and Vale at the bottom, with only .02 of an inch precipitation.

Notices are being mailed out today by Manager Chapman to all members of the Commercial club, reminding them of the coming annual meeting to be held Wednesday evening. There are now 410 resident members of the club, and out of this number there should be a good representation. In addition to the regular routine of business, there will probably be a number of important matters coming up for formal or informal discussion.

Chief of Police Varney would appreciate a little more cooperation from Salem citizens in the matter of information with regard to violations of ordinances. The apprehension of violators usually depends upon quick action on the part of the department. Many people have had such matters brought to their attention but being averse to acting as complainants or of having their names brought before the public, they have refrained from taking action in cases where they might have been of assistance to the officers. It should be understood that all information furnished the department will be kept in strict confidence where so desired.

HOUSE FAVORS REPEAL SCHOOL ELECTION LAW

How to handle the school budget and whether a law favored by the Portland delegation should be forced on the state was brought up this morning in a bill that had been introduced by Mr. Scheubel of Oregon City and one that had received an adverse report by the committee to which it had been referred.

It will be remembered that two years ago the Portland delegation forced through the legislature a bill calling for a general election every year to approve or reject the budget of the school board for the coming year.

To bring things back to the old custom where there was an annual mass meeting called to discuss the budget, Mr. Scheubel was willing that Portland should have a bill repealing the election budget law of two years ago.

Mr. Scheubel was willing the Portland should have all the decisions on its budget that was desired, but he felt that the other cities of the state would prefer the old system. In support of his opinion, he said there were a lot of people in every city who would vote against appropriating money for anything, even schools. That anything in the way of taxes would draw a negative answer.

Mr. Scheubel thought the people should have confidence in their school board and that the city should not be put to an expense every year of an election.

There was also the trouble of getting the voters out and he cited the experiences of Oregon City where a big effort had to be made to secure 50 votes at the election. Mr. Scheubel thought a few disgruntled people who always kick on taxes even for schools could easily defeat a school budget.

The house was inclined to sympathize with Mr. Scheubel and the recommendation of the committee to which the bill was referred that it be rejected was defeated.

As the matter now stands, when the bill comes up for final passage, the house will favor the old style of annual mass meetings for the acceptance or rejection of the school budget for the coming year. The present law says the budget must be prepared in October and later submitted to a vote of the people.

The people of Salem are especially interested in this bill as it was necessary to hold two elections last fall to secure the approval of the budget.
