Several attempts have been made during the past year to form a council of the Boy Scouts in this city and to place the organization on a financial basis. It has had trouble in securing proper attention on account of war activities and for other reasons. The matter was brought up again at a meeting of business and professional men at the Commercial club, at which a temporary committee was appointed, composed of Hal D. Patton, chairman; M. L. Meyers, C. S. Hamilton, C. E. Knowland and Theo. Both, who will arrange for a larger meeting to be held tomorrow evening. This meeting will undertake to complete plans for a general meeting and banquet of business men, to be held some time in February, when speakers will present the merits and needs of the organization and undertake to raise sufficient funds to place it on a substantial footing.

FOOD ADMINISTRATOR NO LONGER NEEDED

Mr. Lockwood Will Continue To Act In Unofficial Capacity, However.

Next Saturday, February 1, the active work of Food Administrator Lockwood will come to an end and that adjunct of the world war will become a thing of the past so far as direct handling of food products is concerned. In closing up the work Mr. Lockwood comments upon the fact that in the main there has been hearty co-operation on the part of the public with the administration, the majority appreciating that they were manifesting genuine patriotism in conforming to the requirements in good spirit.

Although the office is formally abolished, the regulations of the national administration will really continue in force until the final signing of the treaty of peace in Europe, which may not occur within six months. This means that all violations of the act against profiteering may still be dealt with by the authorities in Washington. At the same time Mr. Lockwood has been requested to consider himself as still being an unpaid agent of the government, to be called upon to act with the authorities in case he is needed.

The summer of 1918 marked the high tide of activity in the Salem office when there was both the sugar and the wheat regulations to deal with, and conspicuous among its accomplishments was the 30-day wheatless era when Marion county housewives learned to make bread of everything else on earth but white flour. In that period Salem helped very materially in the task of saving 18,000 barrels of flour in the state.

The re-opening of schools yesterday proved most satisfactory to all concerned, as it developed that after the rigid regulations had been met in the examination of pupils there was about 95 per cent of the normal enrollment on hand. All day Monday the office of the school physician was busy with inspections, there being 500 or 600 pupils sent through his hands. A considerable number were turned back home as a matter of precaution, but not a case of insipient influenza was detected.

The decline of the influenza plague is further emphasized today by the fact that up to noon only one case had been reported, while there were

Notes From The House Of Representatives. The bill introduced in the house providing a specific gravity of 58 instead of the present law of 56 for gasoline will have not smooth sailing if the interests of the big oil companies can induce the judiciary committee to withdraw the bill.

Notes From The House Of Representatives. In order that gasoline might conform with the regulations of California and other states, Martion introduced a bill raising the standard. Last evening at a meeting of the judiciary committee, a representative of the Standard Oil company sent a memorandum to the committee asking that not only the proposed bill be withdrawn, but that the present law be repealed. It was argued that there was enough competition among the four companies to compel the selling of high grade gasoline and that no special specific gravity or law of any kind was necessary.

Notes From The House Of Representatives. It is understood that several Salem and Portland dealers will protest against repealing the old law and will come out in favor of raising the standard of gasoline.

A recent traveler over the Oregon Electric calls attention to the need of warning cards placed in the cars for the benefit of possible influenza victims. These cars may become prolific sources of contagion, for a number of instances were noted where people were coughing and sneezing without any pretense of caution. It is suggested that there should be some sort of cooperation between the railroad management and the state or county authorities whereby passengers would be compelled to exercise caution.

W. D. Smith of Portland, one of the directors of the Loggers and Lumbermen's Loyal Legion of the northwest, is in the city today and this evening will meet with the local body in Moose hall for the purpose of discussing and adopting the new constitution and by-laws of the order. After the signing of the armistice in November a meeting of directors and representatives was called in Portland for the purpose of organizing on a peace basis, and at that time steps were taken to draw up a new constitution eliminating the military phases of the body. The organization will continue as a cooperative institution among the lumbermen, with the understanding that it will respond to any call from the government. There are 175 members of the Legion enrolled in this city, while in the northwest there are from 120,000 to 130,000 members. During the war it proved to be a most effective factor in production and no doubt will in the future be a great benefit to the workers through its fraternal element.
