There will be no commission appointed to outline a program of legislative reforms. The House joint resolution providing for such a commission was easily killed. The House appears to be suspicious of these reformers in legislation.

the state for 16 months and also in having the house vote him the $500 in dispute wherein the governor was opposed to paying him this amount.

The expression "the best and bluest blood of Oregon" in regard to soldiers did not please the labor representatives in the house.

If an employe is not satisfied with the decision of the Industrial Accident commission, he may appeal to the circuit court, should the bill passed by the house finally become a law.

Just at present there is no law on the Oregon statutes providing that if a person should defraud an apartment house or a restaurant, it is a crime.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES

duced when the camp is completed, rendering carpenters and engineers unnecessary. The transient number 45,000, which is the maximum that can be handled, in fact strains the facilities.

The completed institution will be divided into 16 acres, each having its own kitchen, entertainment hall, recreation grounds and Y. M. C. A. hut.

There is an entertainment of some kind in at least one hall every night, sometimes more than one. Minstrel shows by clever colored troops are the most popular.

Occupied With Building Aside from entertainment, the soldiers' time is occupied in construction work, particularly transforming roads into macadamized streets.

The billeting officers also utilize as much of the transient labor as possible in improving the billeting areas under their charge.

The health of the permanent garrison and the transients is carefully supervised. The army hospital contains 2,340 beds, though a third are unoccupied. It is capable of expansion if necessary.

It is the best equipped hospital in the A. E. F. according to Major General George H. Burke, who is in charge of it and who might be expected to protest if he were inadequately supplied with essentials.

The hospital consists of a big stone barracks, building which contains the operating rooms and dozens of frame buildings. The staff includes 10 Red Cross nurses. It was different in the days of the pneumonia and influenza epidemic last fall when there were only 37 nurses.

"The only reason we didn't have more nurses is that they were not to be had," said Major Burke.

The major spoke glowingly of the way the nurses worked during the epidemic saying "they never thought of sleeping and sometimes worked 24 to 36 hours straight."

Blanche Jones, head nurse, whom Major Burke described as "the greatest woman in the A. E. F." has been recommended for congressional recognition.

SQUABBLE IN HOUSE of the resolution: "I would be the last man to do anything that should cause the governor to go to his end prematurely. This resolution permits him to take recreation. It will not hasten any man's end and is not intended as a slam at any individual. If the principal is right that the state should have a lieutenant governor, it is right that the governor should appoint one."

one ever introduced. "I don't believe the grand old man, the governor, would countenance any such measure."

The sudden desire of a certain element in the House of Representatives to elect a lieutenant governor at the coming special election is a political move, declared a member of the house at the close of the afternoon's session.

As the situation now stands, in case of the death of the governor, Secretary of State Olcott would succeed and he would then name his own secretary of state. To prevent such a possibility, opponents of Mr. Olcott presented the bill providing for a lieutenant governor to be appointed by the governor.

However, the bill passed the house by a majority of four votes and will go on the ballot at the coming special election.

The Marion county delegation lined up as follows: In favor of voting for the resolution creating the office of lieutenant governor, Hughes, Looney and Martin. Against the resolution, Weeks and Speaker Jones.

work of monarchists or radicals. While the premier's assassin was a nobleman, Count Arcovalley, the man who shot the other ministers down in the diet chamber was said to be a Spartan.

Additional reports today showed that six ministers, two minor officials and a deputy were shot. The assassin, after killing Home Minister Auer, is reported to have shouted "I'll shoot down the whole lot of you," and to have begun firing promiscuously toward the government bench.

Besides Auer, his victims included War Minister Rosshaupter, Minister of Justice Timm, Minister of Public Worship Hoffman, Minister of Social Affairs Unterlinger, Minister of Communication Praudendorfer, Deputy Osel, Councillor of the War Ministry Garres and Under Secretary for War Jahreis. Both Rosshaupter and Timm were seriously wounded. The former is variously reported to have died from his wounds and to have been captured by the Spartans.

Couldn't Keep Order

Immediately after the shooting, the military commanders in Munich announced that he would not guarantee to maintain order, as he did not have enough men at his disposal to oppose the armed Spartans.

orbs and the fighting began. The revolutionaries were victorious everywhere. Shops, residences and public buildings were plundered, all business and traffic ceased and civilians began an exodus from the city.

Meanwhile friends of the slain Eisner shot and killed Deputy Auer, a centrist, whose violent attacks against the premier through the newspapers were belittled by them to have influenced the feeling against Eisner.

Newspapers, postoffices and principal stations later drove the rioters from the streets. A state of siege was proclaimed. One report said the trade unions were planning a general strike for today as a demonstration against the bolsheviks.

Uprising in Munich

Copenhagen, Feb. 22.—Civil war broke out in Munich at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, it was reported in dispatches received here today.

At that hour the church bells were rung and ten thousand workmen marched from the suburbs into the city. Shortly afterward violent fighting broke out.

The mobs plundered shops and residences. Hundreds of civilians fled from the city. Others were prevented after the Spartans seized the railway stations.

According to the latest reports, workmen dictatorships have been proclaimed and Spartans in armed automobiles were rushing through the streets. Many anarchists were said to have joined them.

War Minister Rosshaupter, wounded during shooting in the diet chamber, was reported to have been arrested later by the Spartans.

Press Responsible

Paris, Feb. 22.—The attacks of the German press upon the Eisner government in Bavaria are held responsible for the assassination of the premier, two of his ministers and a deputy, according to a Zurich dispatch to the Journal today.

Eisner was accused by various tierman newspapers, particularly those in Berlin, of being in sympathy with the Spartans. They conducted a systematic campaign against him. Eisner's attitude toward Prussia was bitter and at one time he broke off relations with the Berlin government.
