REPORT ON MARKET ROADS SUBMITTED

Committee In Session This Morning Reaches No Definite Conclusion.

The only man who can fully appreciate the situation in Marion county as to the million-dollar road bond proposition is the man who has driven a top heavy wagon had down a canyon road with only a margin of six inches of gravel on the outer edge, and not very sure about the brakes. During the past week the committee has been busy delving into facts and figures. There has been a conference with the county court and an investigation of available resources. The report of the special committee for this purpose brought in its report to a meeting of the general Market Roads committee in the Commercial club rooms this morning. This report went into all the details of the situation in an exhaustive manner, the full text of which will be given in these columns later. It showed that there will be available from various channels a total of $230,106 in 1920; $235,320 in 1921; $275,162 in 1922; $280,297 in 1923, and $308,025 in 1924, the figures being based upon an estimated increase in the number of auto licenses, an estimated increase in the county valuations, and an increase in the levy for the general road fund. It was estimated the total cost of the road work over a five year period which would be required, would be approximately $1,234,500, 12 per cent of which would be taken up by the proposed issue of $200,000 of bonds and the balance by direct taxation. Chairman Thomas Kay spoke vigorously in behalf of the original bond proposition, but urged that a campaign of education and publicity was going to be necessary, and that the matter should be taken up by the committee with the utmost caution, as there is likely to be a vast amount of opposition and of friction on the part of individuals and of certain sections. Mr. Van Trump appeared before the meeting as the representative of the Pomona grange, which in its recent session thrashed out the bond question and went on record as opposed to a great bond issue, but would endorse either a direct tax of four mills or a bond issue of $200,000. No action was taken on the committee's report as it seemed that the sentiment of the majority of those present was favorable to a bond issue of $200,000 instead of the plan recommended by the committee, for the reason that under the $200,000 bond plan the roads to be improved with this fund would have to be definitely specified in the measure submitted to the people, and that the people in the outlying communities would demand that the roads to be improved be designated before they would support any measure for raising funds for road paving purposes. At the close of the morning session a committee of three was appointed by Chairman Kay to meet with the representatives of the grange and timber trucks to arrive at some definite understanding as to whether that body would prefer to endorse the direct tax, the $200,000 bond idea, or to make use of both agencies. At the hour of going to press the discussions are still in progress.

The bill was killed February 22 and it is claimed that after a bill has been dead five days it is dead, and there is no such thing as a resurrection. Three days is the limit, according to the rules of the house. And then, not satisfied with two fights, the breeze blew up again just before noon adjournment when an effort was made to introduce a resolution in the house, providing that the State Highway Commission should aid in the construction of what is known as the Mt. Hood loop.

He impressed members with the necessity of America standing by the Czech-Slovaks and Jug-Slavs. Nothing was said according to committee, concerning the probable date of completing the peace treaty, nor of the president's final return from Europe. Following the dinner, which lasted from 8 p. m. until nearly 10 p. m. the president, without any long preliminary statement, invited the guests to question him. So many questions were asked that the session did not end until just before midnight. Members declared the president did not present any arguments. He simply answered inquiries, usually by stating his own view of what the effect of a specific provision would be. There was an entire absence of the controversial spirit, according to committee members. Senator Brandegee, republican, took a leading part in the questioning. Senator Hitecock, chairman of the foreign relations committee, asked few questions, as did Knox and Lodge. These three are scheduled to address the senate this week on the league of nations. Chairman Flood of the house committee, in a formal statement following the conference, said: "I am heartily in favor of a league and since talking with the president am heartily in favor of the constitution as presented. I see nothing in it affecting the sovereignty of this country or the right to control its domestic affairs or anything that weakens the Monroe doctrine."

(Continued from page one) "Moral Force" is Weapon Members of the house committee carried away from the white house conference the distinct impression that the "moral force" is almost the only weapon of the proposed league, they said today. The president was said to have stated emphatically that this country could not be forced into a war without its own consent, and that the United States is not bound otherwise than morally to accept the league decisions as applied to us. Enlarging upon his views of our "moral" obligations the president was said to have told his visitors that he believed that the sentiment of this country was for the protection of the small nations, such as Poland and Czech-Slovakia, until they could stand alone, even to the extent of the use of armed force, if that became necessary. Under this view, it was pointed out by members of the house committee that it was a question of our "going it alone" or as members of a league.

Germany is Menace

Asked who was threatening these smaller countries, the president was said to have answered Germany and to have added that in his belief Germany still constituted the only possible menace to the peace of Europe. There should be no European war for twenty years, he was quoted as saying, because of the fact that nations were exhausted, but that a renewed Germany at the end of this time might again become a menace. The provision for taking into consideration geographic positions when determining the size of the armies and navies, was designed for France, which still feared Germany, and for that Answering a question the president said the provision could also apply to the British navy which had to be large in order to insure Britain uninterrupted communication with her colonies. The president was asked what would be done if Japan tried to seize Magellan Bay as the Mexican coast. Senator McCumber said the league would prevent this. Senator Lodge answered that the United States itself would prevent it without consent of the league. The president, it was said, smiled and nodded at Lodge's reply.
