LEGISLATIVE EXTRAVAGANCE CONDEMNED BY NEWSPAPER

(Roseburg Daily Review.) After a hang-over of nearly a week the Oregon Legislature has at last adjourned. Former legislatures of this state have been severely criticized but apparently none have ever been so universally condemned as this one.

Heretofore the citizens of the state have often felt relieved when the legislative session ended, but this time they are both burdened and indignant. Almost without exception the members were pledged to the strictest economy, and owing to the enormous burdens of the war those pledges should have been rigidly adhered to as was true. Yet scarcely had the session opened when they plunged into the wildest orgy of extravagant appropriations in the history of the state.

The policy which seems to have dominated throughout the session may be summarized in that historic phrase, "the public be damned." After being pledged to a reduction of the numerous boards and commissions existing in this state, when the first real step in that direction came before the legislature for action the bill was "hilariously kicked to death," as was reported from the state house at the time. Several other consolidation bills were not brought up for consideration, showing the contempt of the members for their pre-election pledges.

However, it is the enormous appropriations and the air of contempt for taxpayers of the state that has probably aroused the greatest indignation. While it is well known that the people of the state are anxious for good roads and are willing to provide a reasonable, and even liberal amount of funds therefore, the attaching of an emergency clause to the $10,000,000 road bond issue aroused no small degree of chagrin.

Two more big bond issues, one for $5,000,000 and one for $2,500,000, are

AUBREY JONES WAS BRAVE TO THE LAST

Details Of His Death Told In Letter To His Mother From Commanding Officer.

Mrs. P. A. Baker is in receipt of a letter from Lieutenant George L. Gardridge, who commanded the company of which Aubrey Jones was a member at the time of his death. The letter is as follows:

"Aubrey joined our company just before the Chateau Thierry fighting. I was in command of the company then and remained in that position until after the armistice was signed, so that I knew him very well.

"During all the fighting Aubrey did his part well. He was afraid of nothing and all the other men looked up to him. I do not remember a time that I met him that he was not smiling, no matter how terribly trying the conditions. He was a friend of everyone and everyone liked him.

"In Bullen Woods, which is north of Verdun about 20 kilometers, the Boche put over a small counter attack on Oct. 28 and drove back some of the men from another company who were trying to hold the line. The companies were very small at that time, so small that a battalion was not so strong as a full strength company.

"I went to where our battalion was staying in support and called for volunteers to help get the old line back again. I was nearest our own company at the time and Aubrey was the first one to reach me with his French auto rifle ready.

"In a few minutes we were rushing the line, Aubrey beside me. A machine gun bullet struck him and he dropped. I could not stop then but just after the affair was over, and the line re-taken, I went back to look for him and found him lying where he had fallen with a bullet through his chest.

"As the fire was too heavy there, he was not buried till two days later when Chaplain Hollins and Father O'Connor buried him with prayers in a little cemetery near where he had fallen.

"Aubrey's personal effects were all probably taken by the chaplain and sent to the personal effect department where they will be sent to you.

"I will see the chaplain and if I am able to find out anything about his effects I will let you know at once.

"Your son was a brave man and besides my knowing him so well, he attracted my special attention on several occasions by his actions under fire. I should have promoted him had he only come through this action. He was cited in orders three different times for extraordinary bravery in action.

"Aubrey was a straightforward and brave little man at all times and I feel that I cannot praise him too much. I have often overheard the men in the company and regiment with whom he associated, speak of what a splendid man he was.

"I wish there were more like him. I wanted to write you earlier, but we were not allowed to precede the official government casualty list and I delayed writing not knowing when you would be notified of this sad happening."

SIXTY-FIFTH SESSION

and a third one when Miss Rankin rose to reply.

Miss Rankin Replied "I am sorry to leave you before the women of this nation are enfranchised."

Miss Rankin said "With you, who are to be members of the sixty-sixth congress, I leave the greatest trust, the enfranchisement of women."

Doorkeepers handed out admission cards as souvenirs and with a grand rush to the senate and house restaurants on, everyone but a few weary members, too worn to eat, forgot all about the sixty-fifth congress.

Among those who called for a few minutes chat with the president before he left the capitol were Chairman Horley, shipping board; Sherman Whip Boston attorney; Justice Bandels, Representatives Heflin and Small.

Took Leave at Capitol About 200 capitol employes and news papermen clasped his hands and bade him good bye. The president also took leave of his cabinet.

"Good bye and good luck," shouted the crowd as the president smiling broadly left the room.

"Thank you," he answered as he stepped aboard the elevator. Every time he was spied by thousands pouring from the senate galleries he was greeted with tremendous hand-clapping.

The president reached the white house on his return at 12:30 for luncheon before going to the train.

Signed 23 Bills President Wilson before going to the capitol signed 23 congressional bills, the most important being the act providing for the fourteenth decennial census; the fortifications bill; the bill providing hospitals and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors and marines.

The other bills were of a minor nature.

REPUBLICANS SET

McNary, Nelson, Norris, Kenyon, Jones and Fall in the present senate, and Capper, senator-elect from Kansas, and Elkins, senator-elect from West Virginia.

Of these, opponents of the league claim Kellogg, LaFollette, Jones Fall and Elkins and possibly Nelson are opposed to the present draft of the constitution. McCumber and Norris are definitely with the administration.

Kenyon said today he had answered hundreds of letters, from his constituents by saying he had an open mind and will return to Iowa to discuss the league with his constituents. Until he has done so, Kenyon said, he could not attach his name to any pledge, either for or against the league.

Capper could not be reached yesterday. Elkins is to reach Washington today.

Claim Six Democratic Votes In addition to these, the republicans claim at least six democratic votes. Reed and Gore are known to be defiant against the proposed constitution.

Democratic leaders today admitted they did not know of the republican plan. Senator Lewis, democratic whip, was manifestly surprised when he entered the chamber and learned what had happened.

"If I had been there," said Lewis, whose term ends today, "there would have been something done about it."

It was late yesterday when republicans finally decided to go through with the resolution which has been under consideration for some time. Representative Medill McCormick, senator-elect from Illinois and Senators Lodge, Knox and New were the most active in obtaining the pledges.

They planned to spring the resolution about 8 o'clock this morning, but to get it before the country earlier, decided to let it slip at midnight.

PLANS FOR MARKET ROADS PROGRESSING

The market roads location committee of the movement now on foot to pave 100 miles of market roads in Marion county within the next five years met this morning at the Commercial club with the following present: Harley Moore of Woodburn; George Habbs of Silverton; Jos. J. Keber of Mt. Angel; J. P. Feller of Donald; J. E. Smith of St. Paul; W. A. Taylor of Macleay; H. L. Downing of Shaw; George Keetch of Stayton; Theodore Roth of Salem; David H. Looney of Jefferson and W. M. Hamilton of Salem.

Resides the committee which is to determine the location of this 100 miles of market roads, a large number of enthusiastic road boosters were present from almost every part of the county, coming here to confer with the road location committee.

After it has made its selections, the report of the committee will be referred to the general road committee for approval. After the general committee has decided definitely on the program and road selection, the entire Committee Agrees that County Roads Should Extend Only To City Limits.

After a full discussion of the road committee, contract committee and the county court, the next move in the way of securing market roads for Marion county will be in the preparing of petitions calling for submitting the matter to the people. This will be done in order that the matter may be voted on at the special election June 3.

It was the consensus of opinion of the road location committee that all cities should care for their own roads and that in laying out the proposed 100 miles, the roads were to extend only to the city limits.

Never before has any movement for good roads received such general approval of men from the different parts of the county. There is a feeling that unless the county does build market roads, it will not benefit from the immense amount of money to be spent for the great highways. With the market roads connecting these highways, it is felt that the average farmer will have a hard surfaced road from his doorway to any market in the county. As one of the committee expressed it, this is the day of good roads and Marion county does not intend to be left behind in the procession.

Professor Kauthe and company who opened their two days' engagement at the Bligh theatre yesterday are performing some of the greatest feats of manly strength that has ever been demonstrated before a Salem audience.

They will give a free exhibition in front of the theatre this afternoon at 4:15 and again at 8 p. m. when they will haul three of the largest auto trucks of the Larmer Transfer company down the street by ropes held in their teeth.

At this evening's performance there will be a lively boxing demonstration between one of the members of the company and one of Salem's liveliest boxers.
