HAD TRAVELING STILL.

Atlanta, Georgia, March 12.—Something new in the whisky peddling business was discovered by revenue officers when they accidentally stumbled on a traveling distillery near Tallahassee, Fla., according to reports received here today.
The still was unearthed when the decoiled in a false bottom attached to a wagon and had a capacity of ten gallons. A tiny oil stove furnished the heat and regulation "worm" or coil of copper pipe ran into a barrel in the body of the wagon. It was put into the barrel to hasten the distilling process.
The still was unearthed when the deputies stopped the driver of the wagon to collect from him a federal tax on tobacco which he was peddling. The man confessed that he simply traveled "around from town to town," finding a ready sale for his tobacco and his "white lightning."

COMMANDANT AT OLD SOLDIERS HOME ASKS RELEASE FROM OFFICE

Resignation Was Accepted And Captain James P. Shaw Will Take His Place.

Following closely upon the hearing before Governor Olcott yesterday of charges brought against Commandant Robert C. Markee, of the Soldiers Home at Roseburg, Secretary Goodin, of the Board of Control this morning received a letter from the commandant in which he tenders his resignation, to take effect immediately. The communication reads:
"I hereby tender my resignation as commandant of the Oregon State Soldiers Home at Roseburg. If in your judgment my service as commandant have not at all times and under all circumstances been eminently satisfactory, I trust you will accept this proffer and release me at your earliest convenience. In retiring from the management I do so with the full knowledge that at all times my very best efforts have been exerted in a desire to make for the 'old boys' a home in fact as well as in name. That they have succeeded is evidenced by the fact that I am held in the highest esteem by a majority of the resident members."

The resignation of Mr. Markee was promptly accepted by the board, and on their recommendation Governor Olcott has appointed as his successor Captain James P. Shaw, of Milwaukie, Oregon, a former department commander of the G. A. R. in Oregon. He was not a candidate for the position, but was selected because of his eminent fitness for it, being a pioneer business man and for 45 years a member of the G. A. R. organization, which gives him a wide acquaintance throughout the state and the Northwest.

EDWARD DE VALERY

less, he was emphatic.
De Valero, American born, son of an Irish mother and Spanish father, is the soul of the Irish revolutionary movement. British secret police have been hunting him ever since his romantic escape eleven days ago from Lincoln jail on the east coast of England. I am told that only five persons in the United Kingdom knew he was hiding within five miles of Dublin. Not far from where we met, there were thousands of English soldiers. Dublin swarms with them as does all Ireland. These troops, tin-hatted, fully equipped and armed, guard every public building and all bridges, docks and railroad stations. Their presence has created a tense feeling. Many continually fear clashes between soldiers and civilians.
Bridged Liberty.
"De Valero is risking his liberty in permitting this interview," said the Sinn Feinder who arranged it. "But the chief is willing to take the chance in the hope that he will be able to get across to American people a message from the Irish republican government."
De Valero quoted from President Wilson's fourteen points to prove that Ireland has the right of self-determination.
No revolutionary action will be under taken in Ireland until the peace conference shows conclusively that self-determination will not be granted, he said.
"We hope to avoid violence," he declared. "It means bloodshed, deaths, courts-martial and perhaps executions. But if we have to fight again to regain our rights, if that is forced on us, we shall not hesitate. Ireland must have independence."
Undertook Big Job.
"It's a big job we've undertaken, gaining complete independence for Ireland. In the message I'm to write for you, I'll try to give the American people the reasons why we feel we must have it."
"We are going to win. I think every man in Ireland will be willing to back us in our demands when we make them. Meanwhile we have our government completely organized. We can take over the administration of our country's government at a minute's notice. That's what the Irish republican government was organized for."
Sinn Fein leaders said today that by the time this is in print in America, De Valero will be on a ship bound for the United States. They plan to smuggle him out of Ireland. Meanwhile he flits about from hiding place to hiding place to elude the British agents and does the work of the Sinn Fein government.

Presently another automobile—it was without lights—drew up. My guide jerked my cap down over my nose so I could see nothing, then pushed me into the car. For half an hour we drove at a rate that seemed very fast. We then got out and I sensed a garage. Then I was led across what seemed a court yard. My guide kept urging speed. A door slammed and I felt the warm air of a house. Up a heavy carpeted stair and through a door we went. Then I heard, "now you can take the bandage from your eyes."
I was surprised to find myself in a big room, richly furnished in mahogany and with thick velvet carpets and velvety curtains tightly drawn over the tall windows. A softly shaded lamp stood on a grand piano in one corner.
Before the great fireplace warming his hands, in a black baggy suit, with a black silk handkerchief around his throat, instead of a collar, He wore rubber soled slippers. This was De Valero.
He smiled broadly, shook hands swiftly, and turned to whisper some directions to the guide. Then he talked. A maid in trim uniform appeared with a tray and silver tea service. Between sips De Valero discussed the chances of a revolution against two hundred thousand soldiers, who, he said, are "occupying" Ireland.
A half hour later I was again speeding toward Dublin, the cap over my nose. De Valero, I was told, would soon be hurrying in another direction.
De Valero's full statement to the American people was written by him after Cough had left his house. It was taken into Dublin by a Sinn Fein member of parliament and handed to Cough at his hotel. It will be carried by the United Press tomorrow.
