Miss Marvin, who is both state librarian and state historian in the mat-ter of collecting data for Oregon's war history, recently returned from a visit of several days in Scattle. While there she took pains to look into the work of the Washington war history, and she found that the project there was on a commercial basis and was going to prove very expensive, as all the work of collecting data was being paid for. The promoters had already paid out $12,000 for this work, and they expected the completed book would sell for $15 a volume. In Oregon all the work of collecting is practically being done that has been substituted through school children and teachers, at Ye Liberty today only, so that the cost of ahat part of the
