NEW PLACE FOR ART AND LETTERS.

A new appreciation of her artists and men of letters has come to Great Britain as a result of the war, says the English artist Neirson, who is now in this country.

At the beginning of the war Britain sent her artists and writers to the trenches. It was not until they were invaded home, and such of them as could began to write and paint, that she realized that here were forces that should be preserved as carefully for their own line of work as the specialists in industrial production.

As soon as England did awake to this she sent her artists to the front, to be sure, but this time to make the studies for the great war paintings which should serve as nothing else could to arouse patriotism in the present, and be an invaluable lesson for posterity as well. Equally her writers were encouraged to turn their clever pens to war service, and everybody who reads knows what the contributions of English authors have been as propaganda and as literature.

So, for those who lived to paint and write, and from those who died, but left sketch or immortal lines to rouse their countrymen, England came to a better understanding of art and letters as real factors in human life.

America, too, has learned something of the same lesson, and what has hitherto been regarded as only means for man's amusement has attained a new importance as a great and moving force.

"Each thing in its place is best,

And what seems but an idle show
Strengthens and supports the rest."

BELGIAN KING COMING.

It has been announced apparently from trustworthy sources that the king and queen of Belgium will visit the United States next fall.

This may be the age of democracy but there is hardly any one who could be more welcome in democratic America than these representatives of horn-and-bred royalty. Of course this is partly because all the world still feels a stir of romance in the bottom of its heart at the thought of royal personages. But it is even more because this king and queen have borne themselves these last trying years in accordance with the fundamental idea of kingly behavior.

They suffered danger and deprivation. They "stood by" like the faithful ones of old, and did all they could to relieve the sufferings of their subjects when they could have used their rank as an excuse for escape.

To such royalty America will joyfully open her doors and extend the hospitality of her heart.

RIPPLING RHYMES

By Walt Mason

PESSIMISM.

This good old world's a daisy, a place that ought to charm; the fellow's surely crazy who's viewing with alarm. The human record teaches that doubts and fears are vain, that coming years are peaches, the future safe and sane. I hear the soreheads saying that anarchy is near, that mob law will be playing Old Ned within a year. Because some mangy loafers kick up a row wor two, these poor old grouchy gophers think anarchy's in view. Because, for our salvation, we blew in heaps of cash, the grouchies think the nation will shortly go to smash. They always find it easy to dig up an excuse for forecasts dire and cheery, for turning tear-drops loose. The grouch is never grateful for blessings he enjoys, but still kicks up a hateful amount of useless noise. He thinks 't would be a scandal to wear a hopeful smile, but searches with a candle, to find a jug of bile. Just now we should be cheerful and shedding glee and fun, since we have whipped the heifer and most blameworthy Hun. The problems that confront us we'll solve, I'll bet a bone; and so, till troubles hunt us, let's leave such things alone.

THE ZOO L. OF N.

Every Laegue of Nations has its troubles. The New York Zoo is no exception.

The yellow-footed Rock Wallaby does not like the Tasmanian Black Phalanger, and the Negropok, who is a white stork, detests the Pitta, who screeches about woman's rights from the tree over his head.

The Brazilian Parcupine foists his 999 points on the Waterhaws from British Guiana, and the Jabiru says he will never sign any peace treaty until the spotted Tiger agrees to change some of his spots, which the tiger refuses to do. And there you are.

According to late reports it looked a little as if the old policy of isolation would have to be resorted to, but the keeper has sent for Wilson's Thrush and it may be possible to avert a crisis.

Perhaps the "Roosevelt Memorial Highway" was an unfortunate way to designate the coast road which it is now proposed to build through Oregon. The memorial may be deserved by the great American whose name it bears, but too many people who have to vote on the question at the coming special election will have the idea impressed upon them that it is purely a memorial tourist road and not a great development project which will open up to the vast coast region of the state to settlement and growth. The far-famed Tillamook cheese, which sells in the eastern markets higher than any brand, would be produced in many other sections traversed by this highway, but which are now inaccessible and undeveloped. Last year these coast dairymen, who cannot afford to cut their grass for hay, purchased $100,000 worth of hay from the farmers of the Willamette Valley. Build the Roosevelt highway and in a few years this amount will grow to $1,000,000 a year. Good roads, all now in process of improvement, will tap this highway from the valley section, at the mouth of the Columbia, at Tillamook bay, at Yaquina bay, at the mouth of both the Siusaw and Umpqua rivers, at Coos Bay and at the mouth of the Rogue river. It must really come some day in order to complete the road system which is necessary for the proper development of Oregon. Why not now when the federal government will match the state money dollar for dollar?

The Oregonian reports that it has a man by the name of Smith at Hood River who would like the opportunity to vote for Dr. Leonard Wood for president. The name of this voter has a familiar sound and we imagine that the Oregonian is telling the truth about its discovery. Now if all the Smiths in the country were for the former army surgeon they might elect him and have votes to spare but just one lone Smith and the editor of the Oregonian can't turn the trick.

Even bombing by allied planes should they refuse to sign the peace treaty, might be a relief to the Germans after the "gas" attacks to which they have been subjected by Brockdorff-Rantzau and various members of the reichstag.

The fuss Germany is making over signing the treaty indicates that there has been a great change in that nation. Before the war she never took her signature to any document seriously.

When we read the speeches of Senators Sherman, Reed and others we begin to love the League of Nations for the enemies it has made.

THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

NEIL TELLS BARBARA THAT HE WANTS HER TO GIVE A SMART AFFAIR.

Neil made no reply to my plea for forgiveness a while. I said no more as I was thoroughly convinced that something very out of the ordinary had happened to make him act as he was doing. It was no simple headache which and brought him home in the middle of the day, something he never had done before. He had been unlike himself for days. It had been obviously an effort for him to appear natural before his aunt, or to join in the conversation. He had been self-centered, absent-minded. Had Frederick's refusal to go in this deal with him caused others to fall out, and was he worried about that? He had said nothing about economizing, so it could not be money. I had been queerly cutting down my expenses wherever I could. I had finished a complete inventory of everything in the house. I hoped to be able to remain in my beautiful home if we could do so honestly; but I also hoped Neil would be willing to change our manner of living if it were necessary.

Aunt had spoken of ending her visit soon. I hoped she would. She was very observant. Very little escaped her, and she never hesitated to question both Neil and me. I was very fond of her as was Neil; but I could see he resented her questions, that she was beginning to make him nervous. I wanted her to go, yet I knew I should miss her. Ever since I had invited Mr. and Mrs. Powers and they had sent regrets I had been too depressed over any social success that I had felt I might as well give up entertaining entirely. Aunt and I often had been alone at dinner, and for the evening. If Neil persisted in remaining out, I should be entirely alone after she left. The prospect was not at all alluring.

"Neil goes," Neil had said to me and while I had not objected, I had no plans for going on with it. It now occurred to me and I said:
"Shall we give the dinner you spoke of before your aunt leaves?"
"Yes, and invite everyone you know who is anybody. Give a bang up affair," I was surprised at his animation. He had seemed so depressed.
"How many covers?"
"Oh, twelve or fourteen, then have a musicale or dancing or something afterward and invite a lot more. Get Leonard (a flatter) to decorate for you. He always does things up brown."
"But he is horribly expensive and I thought—"
"I said to make it a bang up affair, didn't I? I don't recall that I mentioned expense."
"Very well, I will do my best." Capitalizing as usual in spite of all my good resolutions as to economy, etc. Surely if he were in any financial trouble he would not want to give an extravagant affair for his aunt.

"I wish we could have Teacie, but I suppose it is out of the question. But be sure to ask Scott and Thompson. Scott may not come. He is peevish with me, but it won't do any hurt to ask him."
"Very well," I saw he wanted to conciliate Scott. "I passed him the other day, and he almost snubbed me," I volunteered, not telling that I had purposely put myself in his way.
"He did! I don't like that. He must be more put out than I thought. Well, ask him anyway." He rose and began to fuss with some papers. "Frederick is coming up this afternoon. Send him right in here. I told him I should not go back to the office," Neil explained.
"All right dear. I am glad he is coming. He will cheer you up."
"Perhaps," I dryly. Somehow I could help but think Neil wanted Frederrick to do something; to back him up in some way. I so hoped he would see a way to do it. Yet I knew all the time that he would be doing it for me, not for Neil should he interest himself further in Neil's schemes.

"Poor Neil. I wish I could help him. I muttered as I went up to Robert. I was still with him when Mr. Frederick came. But about six o'clock Neil sent for me, and said that Mr. Frederick was going to stay in dinner.
"I am delighted," I said frankly, and I meant it. Neil looked so much brighter, so different from the way he had looked since he came home in the morning that even had I not liked Frederick I should have welcomed him for my husband's sake.
