

CHAPTER XXI.

The End in Sight.

Barnes, soaring beyond all previous heights of exaltation, ranged distantly between "front" and "back" at the Grand opera house that evening. He was in the "wings" with her, whispering in her delighted ear; in the dressing-room, listening to her soft words of encouragement to the excited leading lady; on the narrow stairs leading up to the stage, assisting her to mount them; and all the time he was dreading the moment when he would awake and find it all a dream.

There was an annoying fly in his contentment, however. "I love you," she had said simply. "I want more than anything else in all the world to be your wife. But I cannot promise now. I must have time to think, time to—"

"Why should you require more time than I?" he persisted. "What is time to me? Why make wanton waste of it?"

"I know that I cannot find happiness except with you," she replied. "No matter what happens to me, I shall always love you. I shall never forget the joy of this. But—I cannot promise now," she finished gently and kissed him.

Between the second and third acts Tommy Gray rushed back with the box-office statement. The gross was $350. The instant that fact became known to Mr. Rushcroft he informed Barnes that they had a "knockout," a gold mine, and that never in all his career had he known a season to start off so auspiciously as this one.

Three days later Barnes and "Miss Jones" said farewell to the strollers and boarded a day train for New York city. They left the company in a condition of prosperity. The show was averaging two hundred dollars nightly and Mr. Rushcroft was already looking return engagements for the early fall. He was looking forward to a tour of Europe at the close of the war.

Barnes' sister, Mrs. Courtney, met them at the Grand Central terminal. "It's now a quarter to five," said Barnes after the greeting and presentation. "Drop me at the Fifth Avenue bank, Edith. I want to leave something in my safety box downstairs. She'll be more than five minutes."

He got down from the automobile at Forty-fourth street and shot across the sidewalk into the bank, casting quick, apprehensive glances through the five o'clock crowd on the avenue as he sprinted. In his hand he juggled the heavy, weatherbeaten pack. His sister and the countess stared after him in amazement.

Presently he emerged from the bank, still carrying the bag. He was beaming. A certain worried, haggard expression had vanished from his face, and for the first time in eight hours he treated his traveling wardrobe with scorn and indifference.

"Thank God, they're off my mind at last," he cried. "That is the first good, long breath I've had in a week. No, not now. It's a long story and I can't tell it in Fifth Avenue. It would be extremely annoying to have both of you die of heart failure with all these people looking on."

He felt her hand on his arm, and knew that she was looking at him with wide, incredulous eyes, but he faced straight ahead. He was terribly afraid that the girl beside him was preparing to shed tears of joy and relief. He could feel her searching in her jacket pocket for a handkerchief.

Mrs. Courtney was not only curious but apprehensive. She hadn't the faintest idea who Miss Cameron was, nor where her brother had picked her up. But she saw at a glance that she was lovely, and her soul was filled with strange misgivings. She was like all sisters who have pet bachelor brothers. She hoped that poor Tom hadn't gone and made a fool of himself.

The few minutes' conversation she had with the stranger only served to increase her alarm. Miss Cameron's voice and smile—and her eyes!—were positively alluring.

She had had a night letter from Tom that morning in which he said that he was bringing a young lady friend down from the north—and would she meet them at the station and put her up for a couple of days? That was all she knew of the dazzling stranger up to the moment she saw her. Immediately after that she knew by intuition a great deal more about her than Tom could have told in volumes of correspondence. She knew, also, that Tom was lost forever!

"Now tell me," said the countess the instant they entered the Courtney apartment. She gripped both of his arms with her firm little hands and looked straight into his eyes, eagerly, hopefully. She had forgotten Mrs.

Courtney's presence, she had not taken the time to remove her hat or jacket.

"Let's all sit down," said he. "My knees are unaccountably weak. Come along, Edie. Listen to the romance of my life."

And when the story was finished the countess took his hand in hers and held it to her cool cheek. The tears were still drowning her eyes.

"Oh, you poor dear! Was that why you grew so haggard and pale and hollow-eyed?"

"Partly," said he with great significance.

"And you had them in your pack all the time? You—"

"I had Sprouse's most solemn word not to touch them for a week. He is the only man I feared. He is the only one who could have—"

"May I use your telephone, Mrs. Courtney?" cried she suddenly. She sprang to her feet, quivering with excitement. "Pray forgive me for being so ill-mannered, but I—I must call up one or two people at once. They are my friends. You will understand, I am sure."

Barnes was pacing the floor nervously when his sister returned after conducting her new guest to the room prepared for her. The countess was at the telephone before the door closed behind her hostess.

"I wish you had been a little more explicit in your telegram, Tom," she said peevishly. "If I had known who she is I wouldn't have put her in that room. Now I shall have to move Aunt Kate back into it tomorrow and give Miss Cameron the big one at the end of the hall." Which goes to prove that Tom's sister was a bit of a snob in her way. "Stop walking like that and come here." She faced him accusingly. "Have you told all there is to tell, sir?"

"Can't you see for yourself, Edie, that I'm in love with her? Desperately, horribly, madly in love with her. Don't giggle like that! I couldn't have told you while she was present, could I?"

"That isn't what I want to know. Is she in love with you? That's what I'm after."

"Yes," said he, but frowned anxiously.

"She is perfectly adorable," said she, and was at once aware of a guilty, nagging impression that she would not have said it to him half an hour earlier for anything in the world.

She was strangely white and subdued when she rejoined them later on. She had removed her hat. The other woman saw nothing but the wealth of sun-kissed hair that rippled. Barnes went forward to meet her, filled with a sudden apprehension.

"What is it? You are pale and—what have you heard?"

She stopped and looked searchingly into his eyes. A warm flush rose to her cheeks; her own eyes grew soft and tender and wistful.

"They all believe that the war will last two or three years longer," she said huskily. "I cannot go back to my own country till it is all over. They implore me to remain here with them until—until my fortunes are mended." She turned to Mrs. Courtney.

"Yes," she breathed.

and went on without the slightest trace of indecision or embarrassment in her manner. "You see, Mrs. Courtney, I am very, very poor. They have taken everything. I—I fear I shall have to accept this kind, generous offer of a—"

her voice shook slightly—"of a home with my friends until the Huns are driven out."

Barnes' silence was more eloquent than any words. Not until Mrs. Courtney expressed the hope that Miss Cameron would condescend to accept the hospitality of her home until plans for the future were definitely fixed was there a sign that the object of her concern had given a thought to what she was saying.

"You are so very kind," stammered the countess. "But I cannot think of imposing upon—"

"Leave it to me, Edie," said Barnes gently, and, laying his hand upon his sister's arm, he led her from the room. Then he came swiftly back to the outstretched arms of the exile.

"A very brief New York engagement," he whispered in her ear, he knew not how long afterward. Her head was pressed against his shoulder, her eyes were closed, her lips parted in the ecstasy of passion.

"Yes," she breathed, so faintly that he barely heard the strongest word ever put into the language of man.

Half an hour later he was speeding down the avenue in a taxi. His blood was singing, his heart was bursting with joy—his head was light, for the feel of her was still in his arms, the voice of her in his enraptured ears.

He was hurrying homeward to the "diggings" he was soon to desert forever. He was to spend the night at his sister's apartment. When he issued forth from his "diggings" at half-past seven he was attired in evening clothes, and there was not a woman in all New York, young or old, who would have denied him a second glance.

Later on in the evening three of the countess' friends arrived at the Courtney home to pay their respects to their fair compatriot and to discuss the crown jewels. They came and brought with them the consoling information that arrangements were practically completed for the delivery of the jewels into the custody of the French embassy at Washington, through whose intervention they were to be allowed to leave the United States without the formalities usually observed in cases of suspected smuggling. Upon the arrival in America of trusted messengers from Paris, headed by no less a personage than the ambassador himself, the imperial treasure was to pass into hands that would carry it safely to France. Prince Sebastian, still in Halifax, had been apprised by telegraph of the recovery of the jewels, and was expected to sail for England by the earliest steamer.

And while the visitors at the Courtney house were lifting their glasses to toast the prince they loved, and, in turn, the beautiful cousin who had braved so much and fared so luckily, and the tall wayfarer who had come into her life, a small man was stooping over a rifled knapsack in a room far downtown, glumly regarding the result of an unusually hazardous undertaking, even for one who could perform such miracles as he. Scratching his chin, he grinned—for he was the kind who bears disappointment with a grin—and sat himself down at the big library table in the center of the room. Carefully selecting a pen-point he wrote:

"It will be quite obvious to you that I called unexpectedly tonight. The week was up, you see. I take the liberty of leaving under the paperweight at my elbow a two-dollar bill. It ought to be ample payment for the damage done to your faithful traveling companion. Have the necessary stitches taken in the gash and you will find the kit as good as new. I was moreover less certain not to find what I was after, but as I have done no irreparable injury I am sure you will forgive my love of adventure and excitement. It was really quite difficult to get from the fire escape to your window, but it was a delightful experience. Try crawling along that ten-inch ledge yourself some day and you'll find it isn't productive of a pleasant thrill. I shall not forget your promise to return good for evil some day. God knows I hope I may never be in a position to test your sincerity. We may meet again, and I hope under agreeable circumstances. Kindly pay my deepest respects to the Countess Ted, and believe me to be,

"Yours, very respectfully,

"SPROUSE."

"P. S.—I saw O'Dowd today. He left a message for you and the countess. Tell them, said he, that I ask God's blessing for them forever. He is off tomorrow for Brazil. He was very much relieved when he heard that I did not get the jewels the first time I went after them, and immensely entertained by my jolly description of how I went after them the second. By the way, you will be interested to learn that he has cut loose from the crowd he was trailing with. Mostly nuts, he says. Dynastizing munition plants in Canada was a grand project, says he, and it would have come to something if the d—d women had only left the d—d men alone. The expletives are O'Dowd's."

Ten hours before Barnes found this illuminating message on his library table he stood at the window of a lofty Park avenue apartment building, his arm about the slender, yielding figure of the only other occupant of the room. Pointing out over the black housetops, he directed her attention to the myriad lights in the upper floors of a great hostelry to the south and west and said:

"That is where you are going to live, darling."

(THE END.)

CAMPING? ALRIGHT!

We have the outfit. The most up the minute camping outfit you have ever seen. You don't have to bother with tent poles, beds or chairs---you have the whole condensed in a package, small enough to put on the running board of an automobile; the complete outfit consists of tent, 2 beds, 1 table, chairs

And if you really want to enjoy life---this size Victrola should be included.

We have just received a large shipment of porch furniture in the red and fibre upholstered or plain also beautiful designs of Hong Hong sea grass. This furniture is specially adapted to outdoors use as it is absolutely damp proof. The prices range from $5 to $25 on rockers and chairs. Lots for everyone.

YOU GET MORE FOR YOUR MONEY AT MOORE'S

W. W. Moore
FURNITURE STORE

See Our Window Display

STATE HOUSE.

Governor Olcott today announced the personnel of the state line board to include Benton Bowers of Ashland, representing the taxpayers league, who succeeds himself; John Shimmon of Cambridge, representing the farmers' union, who succeeds himself; Dean A. B. Cordley of Corvallis, appointed by the governor to succeed himself, and Sam H. Moore, Corvallis, appointed by the governor to succeed the varden of the penitentiary. B. G. Leedy, also of Corvallis, is the remaining member of the board, representing the state grange, and holds over.

Under the law of the last legislature the warden of the penitentiary is removed as a member of the board and the governor has two appointments to make from the state at large rather than one. The other members are selected by the governor. The state grange, farmers' union and taxpayers' league each recommend two members and from each set of two the governor selects one as an appointee.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

"The great peace" an interesting discussion of the possibilities of permanent peace, with special consideration of the questions of nationalism and internationalism, by the author of "The things men fight for," H. H. Powers.

"The web," the story of the American protective league in its work of patriotism told by Emerson Hough.

"Our flag in verse and prose," a book of selections edited by Albert H. Schaffner.

"Out of the shadow," the story of a Russian immigrant girl who writes of her experiences with originality and skill, Rose Cohen.

"The book of fish and fishing," practical advice for those who angle in fresh and salt water, by Louis Rhoad.

"Lure and stream game fishing," a practical book on fresh water game flow, and the tackle necessary, by the president of the American anglers' league, Carroll B. Cook.

"Jewelry making and design," an illustrated text-book for students of design and for craft workers in jewelry, incidentally interesting to the casual reader who cares to know more about artistic work by A. F. Rose and Antonio Cirino.

"Chaffing-dish recipes," an interesting group of recipes with some new ideas, by Gladys Lemcke.

"The years between," a new book of poems first advertised under the title "Gethsemane," by Rudyard Kipling.

"Christopher and Columbus," the story of two seventeen-year-old girls, who looked German, but felt English, when they discovered America at the beginning of the European war, by the author of "Elizabeth and her German garden."

"The Prestons," the story of an average American family told by a typical American mother, a novel by Mary Heaton Vorse.

W. C. Hawley, traveling mechanic for the Elgin Six factory, arrived in Salem yesterday to make his headquarters for a few days with the local Elgin Six agency. While here Mr. Hawley will inspect the various Elgin cars in this part of the state for possible defects. Mr. Hawley's visit to Salem is the result of the Elgin system of sending an expert mechanic over the country every 60 days to assist Elgin owners in keeping their cars in the best of condition.

When you use Journal classified ads get what you want them to---they work fast.

BUSINESS FAILURES IN UNITED STATES.

Have been very largely due to ignorance and negligence; ignorance of the principles of Constructive business methods, and Negligence in the application of knowledge possessed of these principles.

We can point out Your Errors of the Past, Show you how to Avoid them in the Future, and help you Attain Success.

TROMLEY & HENDERSON

Auditors & Business Analysts

Chamber of Commerce Bldg. Portland, Ore.

MRS. D. B. SPEER

CALLED BY DEATH

Mrs. D. B. Speer died this morning at her home in Hazelwood addition after a short illness. The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon at the Baptist church, Dr. Young will preach the services and the body will be taken to Silverton for burial.

Mrs. Eureka Ann Speer was born in Iowa June 5, 1869. She came to Albany ten years ago. All members of the family except the son, Howard, will be here for the funeral. A brother, Dr. J. A. Benshoof of Seattle, arrived this morning but too late to see his sister. He will return to Seattle today, but will come back for the funeral Sunday. Those surviving are the following: Her husband, D. B. Speer; children, Howard Speer, aboard U. S. S. Missouri; Miss Minerva Speer; her father, Jacob Benshoof of Silverton, and the following brothers and sisters: B. F. of Lebanon, J. W. of Oklahoma, B. H. Behrends of Silverton and Mrs. L. Platt of Silverton and Mrs. R. D. Seibert of Seattle.—Albany Herald.

Try Salem First In Buying
Salem's a Good Place to Trade

Pathe
JULY
RECORDS ON SALE

An appetizing musical feast is offered in the July Pathe Records. Something for every taste. Call at the Pathe Shop and listen to some of these really remarkable numbers. Here are a few from the half-hundred to select from.

Love, Fly on Reef Pianos	Claudia Muzio	$4.25
Il Trovatore, in Italian	Claudia Muzio	12 inch $1.25
A perfect rendition of this beautiful song of love.
Pathe Valse	Joel Holliman	$2.15
Caravate	Joel Holliman	12 inch $1.25
Ballet de Sylvia "Les Chacres"		$4.15
Ballet de Sylvia "Les Chacres"	Garde Republicaine Band	$1.25
Mussey's Lullaby (Vocal Refrain by Waltz)		$4.15
Head Over Heels	Modley Fox Trot	$1.25
Saved (Bright)	Earl F. Wilde	$2.05
The Child of a King	Earl F. Wilde	10 inch $1.25
Bliss Sunday's a saint and musical director
I'll Say She Does	Ernest Hare, Bostons	$2.05
Oh! Lullaby	Billy Murray, Tenor	10 inch $1.25
When You See Another Sweetie Hanging Around		$2.05
When I Get in Indian in the Moon	Adela Rowland, Soprano	10 inch $1.25
My Dream Fantasy (Que Step)		$2.15
Sweet Success (Fox Trot)	Polish Royal Orchestra Band	$1.25
Slim Tremaine (One Step)		$2.05
Everybody Shimmies Now (Fox Trot)	Sydney Jazz Band	10 inch $1.25

E. L. Stiff & Son
COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS