

Pies and Tea—The American Y.W.C.A. In France Is Famous for Both of Them

The foundations of the Y. W. C. A. in France were laid not upon a rock as per Biblical instruction, but upon tea. Wherever it went it got out a tea table, set forth the cups, brewed some tea, found the lemons and then passed the sugar.

Hundreds of cups of tea were passed to nurses by directors of the nurses' clubs. The scene in this picture, snapped at Angers, France, has been repeated a thousand afternoons in every corner where the Blue Triangle followed the Stars and Stripes.

This nurses' hut is built of red brick. Its rough beam ceiling is covered with pine branches and leaves from the forest outside its doors. It is located on the grounds of what was once an old monastery. But where the quiet brown-clad monks once chanted their prayers, jolly American nurses, in white aprons, red lined capes and jaunty caps, run back and forth from hospital ward to barack.

And every afternoon they come to the hut for tea.

PATRIOTIC SERVICE DRAWS LARGE CROWD

Many Returned Soldiers Attend "Demobilization" Ceremonies.

The patriotic service at the First Methodist church last night drew a large audience, in which there were a considerable number of returned soldiers. Patriotic songs were sung by the audience under the direction of Mr. Todd, several selections were rendered by a male quartet, and Miss Johns rendered very effectively "The Rose of Picardy."

The central object of the occasion was the "demobilization" of the church service flag and proper recognition of the soldiers who had returned, as well as of those who would never return. As the roster is still incomplete, the roll call was not read, but the pastor noted the fact that there had been 133 men enrolled from the church, of which number only 63 had thus far returned, and it was decided to allow the flag to remain in position until all the men had been mustered out.

Half a dozen brief addresses filled up the latter part of the evening. Prof. Todd, at the head of the war camp community service, spoke of the work and plans of the organization in Marion county for the benefit of returned soldiers. He also took up briefly the matter of the soldiers and sailors educational aid act, which he anticipated would bring a large influx of students into Salem. Along with this he called attention to the privilege which the government was extending to the soldiers in exchanging their war insurance for regular insurance policies in six different forms.

Attorney W. C. Winslow took the platform with a humorous allusion to the fact that his subject had been changed several times in the announcements and the speech he had prepared would have to be discarded, and he wouldn't confine his impromptu address to six minutes. He paid a vigorous tribute of commendation to the privates in the ranks, citing the fact that he American private had proven himself vastly superior to the German private because of his intelligence and initiative. He went so far as to state that the greatest proportion of efficiency in the American army was with the privates.

Harry O. Mills gave the audience some of his impressions of the French race as he had observed them in his travels, and especially in Paris. He noted among other things that the French had an infinite capacity for detail, and that in all vocations there was the evidence of the artistic trend.

Rev. James Elvis, who spent a long period in the Y. W. C. A. work in France, testified to the grand work accomplished by the latter type of Y worker, both in evangelical efforts and in camp service. He held that the association had fulfilled its mission among the soldiers in a way that reflected credit upon it.

President Doney, who has had to do with the rank and file both on the French front and among the students of Willamette university, spoke feelingly of the welcome which both the church and the school extended to the returning soldiers. He held that the boys who had gone into the war with the influence of these institutions upon them had come back stronger in faith and character, and assured them that both the school and the church would do their duty in making plans for their future and in renewing the bonds of he past.

Pastor Avison, referring to the fact that boys had gone from the church to all parts of the earth, reminded his audience that the boys who wore the uniform at home were worthy of the same honor, for they had manifested the same spirit of devotion and willingness to serve.

Ed Swallow of Stayton has brought suit against the Wilbur Woolen Mills company of Stayton for $979.50. In his complaint he alleged that on January 29, 1919, he entered into a contract with the mill to work as superintendent of the carding and spinning machines used in the mill at Stayton at a salary of $33 a week. That he entered into the work February 24, and that he was injured April 24 to such an extent that he was incapacitated for work. He alleges that the company then notified him his services were no longer wanted. That as an experienced foreman, he is capable of earning $33 to $40 a week. He also alleges that the woolen mill has taken advantage of the workmen's compensation act and that he has been drawing $70.50 a month and according to the law will continue to draw this amount for six months. As his injury is such that he cannot remove from Stayton for eight months, he asks $979.50 damages for the company's refusing to re-employ him after his accident.

To have a standing in court, if one is doing business under an assumed name, such name must be filed with the county clerk, all according to section 1, chapter 154 of the general laws of Oregon. Hence Lothar Ullman of New York city who is conducting a business of buying and selling hops has filed the name of Carl Ullman & Co. under which name he will conduct his business in Oregon.

Floyd D. Moore, county clerk of Polk county, made a very important visit to Marion county late yesterday afternoon. He called on the clerk of Marion county to secure a license to marry Marion C. Blivens of Salem, whose occupation is given as stenographer. They will be married in Dallas tomorrow.
