PRESIDENT TO VISIT

that the country can get back to normal and bring down prices, will also form a large part of the president's presentation of his case, it is believed.

The first stop after Columbus will be at Indianapolis.

Those accompanying the president will be: Mrs. Wilson, Admiral Grayson, the president's personal physician; Secretary Tumulty; Gilbert Close, the president's stenographer and other officials.

A large force of secret service men will also go.

Denver and Coeur D'Alene, Idaho, are included in the president's itinerary, it was learned. Points on the Oregon Short Line will be visited.

According to a California senator the president will speak at San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco. He is also being urged to make platform speeches at Sacramento, Redding and other points.

There will be a speech at Portland but Seattle was not definitely included, it was said.

The remainder of the president's itinerary will be announced later.

Secretary Tumulty said the speeches at Columbus will probably be at night and later speeches will be both afternoon and night.

Whether the president gets to San Francisco September 15 depends on how many speeches he delivers on his way west. There could be only a few stops if he is to reach the coast by that time. Word has been received by the navy department from Secretary Daniels that the review of the Pacific fleet, which the president hoped to attend, has been tentatively set for September 15.

The early beginning of the president's trip also means that he cannot be in New York to greet General Pershing who is to land there September 8 or 9.

At the White House it was said that arrangements for the trip are as yet incomplete.

From Columbus he could make Indianapolis for an afternoon speech if he desired, although the Indianapolis plans are still to be definitely announced.

Present plans also call for stops at St. Louis and Kansas City.

the labor and railroad wage situations in which he has appealed for a truce until the country can return to a normal basis, probably will rest largely with what develops on those two special problems between now and next Wednesday.

Although the president's first speech will be in territory which is reported here as friendly to the league, he desires that his stops be made in places where the opposition predominates, wherever possible.

Despite the president's eagerness to make as many speeches as possible, he has been advised that his trip should last only a little more than three weeks at most. It was possible, it was said, that he will be gone from Washington only about 25 days.

Mayor Otto J. Wilson, upon being told that President Wilson would pass through the city, said that efforts would be made through Senator McNary and others to induce the presidential train to stop for a time in Salem, or at least long enough for the president to deliver a rear platform address. The mayor also said that at the next meeting of the city council the matter would be presented and that an official invitation would be extended through the city council.

T. E. McCroskey, manager of the Salem Commercial club, was out of the city today but directors of the club interviewed said that everything would be done to induce the president to deliver an address while passing through the city.

IMMEDIATE CONFERENCE

to solve and we should administer only definite and tested remedies. And it is entirely possible to determine on those remedies and their applications if we summon to the conference the knowledge and experience of all elements and interests in our industrial life.

"The organization of the conference should be given careful thought. While it might be termed a conference of capitalists and labor those are rather indefinite terms. Capital is a rather vague term. While capital, as representing finance should, of course, have representation, there should also be representatives of management and of those groups, which under capital, have a more immediate contact with the problems of labor and production as they arise in the mills and shops and on the farms.

"To my mind, the studies of the conference should be directed along two lines.

"First there should be a determination of the principles that should govern in all relations between employer and employee. This should be founded on good conscience, and should cover the question of wages to labor and return to capital, opportunity for advancement and betterment and recognition of merit.

"Second should be the determination of ways by which the principles might be carried out.

"It is here that vagueness and theorizing should be barred. Every employer and every manager who comes into the conference should be asked: 'How do you handle those problems? What is your practice?'

of known, tested methods, there should be worked out a general program applicable to the different lines of industry, but all meeting the principles laid down and bearing the indorsement of having been proven in actual practice.

"We must stop the concentration of our workers in big cities," Lane says, "if we are to solve for long the problem of soaring food prices. Consumers are increasing more rapidly than producers.

"There is no reason why a very large percentage of our shop and mill men could not produce much of their own food, if our factories and shops were located with a view to the well being and comfort of the men and their families as well as to the convenience and comfort of capital.

"I know of one mill town where every worker has a home with from half an acre to an acre of ground around it. Each has his own garden—enough to produce all the vegetables his family needs. Each of them has a pig or two and most of them a cow. Each has a flock of chickens.

"There is a method that capital should consider in the location of future industries. That alone would help not only the workers at plants so located but would relieve the cost of living pressure and those who still must live in cities. It would relieve transportation and in many other ways contribute to a general betterment of all concerned."
