Japanese Laborers Not Favorable To League Of Nations Declares Leader

Yokohama, Japan, Aug. 1.—(By Mail to the United Press.)—Japanese labor is not satisfied with the league of nations covenant, if Bunji Suzuki, the "Gomper" of Japan, speaks for the laboring class.

Referring to the covenant, Suzuki declared that "we can hardly agree with some of the conditions, for instance, the fact that there are no reliable assurances whereby war is made impossible." Too little attention was paid to the problem of racial equality, he said, and immigration of laborers was treated only superficially, "and remains unsolved, causing irritation."

"The form of the league of nations is fixed," he said, "but the spirit of such a league is yet to be born."

is fixed," he said, "but the spirit of such a league is yet to be born."

Suzuki, who arrived here from America, said Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, told him he expected to visit Japan next April.

Minister Ochiai and other who represented Japan at the international labor congress were "utterly incompetent" and "exposed their utter unpreparedness," according to Suzuki. They showed the world a lack of initiative among Japanese delegates, he said.
