

MEATS AND EGGS SOAR HIGH OVER FORMER PRICES

With commission houses and grocers paying from 58 to 60 cents a dozen wholesale for eggs, housekeepers are facing a retail price of about 75 cents a dozen in Salem, notwithstanding the fact that the big agitation is now on to reduce the cost of living.

One year ago eggs were selling wholesale in Salem at 45 cents a dozen, with a retail price of 55 and 60 cents. Two years ago the dealers were paying 40 cents a dozen, with retail at 50 cents. To the housekeeper, the price of eggs has advanced 25 cents a dozen in the past two years.

The same story of higher living costs is true in the poultry market. Meat markets and commission houses were paying 16 cents a pound for hen two years ago. Now the market quotation is 24 cents a pound. For chickens, the price paid by dealers two years ago was 18 cents. Today it is 22 cents.

The veal market has also kept pace with higher living costs. Two years ago meat markets were paying stock raisers 15 cents a pound. One year ago the price was 18 cents while today the markets will pay 23 cents.

While statistics show that Salem is one of the most economical places in the whole country in which to live, figures also show that the market bill and the egg bill has made a striking advance over the figures of two years ago.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 25.—(United Press.)—The San Gabriel canyon was the center of the Angeles forest fire zone today.

He outlined how the fire in the San Fernando region, the Arroyo-Seco which is the Pasadena watershed and in all of the big fire zones excepting the San Gabriel district, had either burned themselves out or been controlled.

Denouncing some of the amusements to be found on the fair grounds, many speakers declared they believed these shows, some of which, it is said, are of an undesirable nature, should be done away. Games of chance were not favored by the association.

High praise was given A. H. Lea, secretary of the state fair association. Credit for the huge success of this season's fair is largely due Secretary Lea it is believed.
